330. ——.]—Testator, after certain specific bequests, gave to his wife all his property in the world for her life, & after her decease all his freehold & leasehold estates to his sister B. & her heirs, & the interest of his funded & other property between B. & S. for their respective lives, with remainders over. Testator then declared that his wife should hold peaceable possession of his house, furniture, plate, linen & glass, & all his property at East House & elsewhere for her life; & that no distribution of any part of his property should take place until after the decease of his wife, except for payment of debts, etc.:—Held: the widow was entitled to the enjoyment in specie of certain long annuities, part of the residue of testator's estate.— HOUSE v. WAY (1848), 18 L. J. Ch. 22; 12 L. T. O. S. 268; 12 Jur. 958.

331. ——.]—Testator gave his property to trustees for the benefit of his wife for her life, & after her decease to be equally divided among his ten children, the object being that during the widow's life, she might have the means of bringing up her children. One of the children became insolvent, & on a claim for the administration of testator's estate, filed by assignees in insolvency & praying that the widow might be ordered to convert certain leaseholds & long annuities, & to invest the money in ct., instead of enjoying the income in specie:—Held: upon the construction of the will, & considering that testator's object was to provide not only for his widow but also for his children during her life, she was entitled to the income in specie, & pltfs. were not entitled to costs in prosecuting a claim in such a case.—MARSHALL v. BREMNER (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 237; 2 W. R. 320; 65 E. R. 381.

332. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate & effects, in trust to pay "the annual proceeds to his wife" for life, & after her death, to divide "his said residuary estate & effects" between his nephews & nieces; & he directed that his nephews, in the division, should take such parts of the joint property as he held with them. Part of the joint property was leasehold:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to enjoy the whole perishable property in specie.—HOLGATE v. JENNINGS (1857), 24 Beav. 623; 53 E. R. 498.

335. ——.]—Testator, who was possessed of the copyright in certain books, of which his aunt was the authoress, bequeathed all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife, & after her death or second marriage he devised & bequeathed the whole of such real & personal estate to his trustees upon trust to divide the same into three equal parts & to pay the income of one-third to each of two sisters & a brother for life, with remainder in each case to the children of the life tenant. Some of these books were being published under agreements with publishers securing royalties to testator as owner of the copyright. The copyrights in other stories had been previously transferred by the authoress under agreements to publishers who were to publish the story in book form, & after deducting from the income all expenses relating to the production & sale the profits remaining were to be equally divided between the authoress & the publishers:—Held: the mere trust, on the determination of the limited interest, to divide the residuary estate was not in itself a sufficient manifestation of an intention to exclude the application of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, & in accordance with that rule the interest of testator in the copyrights & his agreements relating thereto must be valued as at the expiration of one year from the date of his death, & the tenant for life would, as from the death, be entitled to receive interest at 4 per cent. on such value.—Re EVANS' WILL TRUSTS, PICKERING v. EVANS, [1921] 2 Ch. 309; 91 L. Testator died possessed of personal estate comprising (inter alia) furniture, a leasehold house, & shares in a limited co.:—Held: testator, by the language he had used, had evidenced his intention to exclude the operation of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante, & the tenant for life was entitled to enjoy testator's residuary estate in specie during her life.—Re BARRATT, NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, LTD. v. BARRATT, [1925] Ch. 550; 94 L. Trust to pay debts—Annuities not required for payment of debts.]—Testator, after certain specific bequests gave all other his estate & effects to trustees, upon trust, after his decease, to call in all moneys that might be due to him upon bonds, notes, or other securities, & thereout & out of any other part of his personal estate to pay his debts, etc., & to invest the residue in govt. stocks, & receive the dividends, interest, & annual proceeds thereof from time to time as the same should become due & payable, together with the dividends, interest, & annual proceeds of such other govt. stocks as he might be possessed of at the time of his decease, & to pay thereout an annuity of £20 & to pay the whole remaining dividends, etc., of the said stocks & funds as the same should be received, to his wife for life, with remainders over. Testator, at the time of his death, was possessed of £220 long annuities, which were not required for the payment of debts:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to the enjoyment of the long annuities in specie.—MILNE v. PARKER (1848), 17 L. J. Ch. 194; 12 Jur. 171.

338. Direction to pay rents.]—Testator gave all his real & personal estate & effects, upon trust to pay the rents & profits, dividends & interest to a tenant for life, with trusts over in remainder; & declared, that, notwithstanding the gift of his freehold & leasehold estates, the trustees might sell them, except his dwelling-house, at such time as they should think fit. Testator's estate consisted partly of leasehold property & long annuities:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to the enjoyment of the income of both these descriptions of property in specie.—BURTON v. MOUNT (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 383; 11 L. He gave to his trustees a power of investment of all principal moneys "which should arise from his said real & personal estate." The will contained a power of leasing "all or any part of testator's hereditaments & premises hereinbefore devised"; & testator declared that the receipts or receipt in writing of the trustees for the time being "for the purchase-money of the hereditaments & premises sold" should be good discharges to the purchases. There was no trust for sale expressly created, & no power of sale expressly given:—Held: the previous words which directed an enjoyment of the leasehold property in specie, were not controlled by the subsequent words; & the trustees were not bound to convert.—Re ELMORE'S WILL TRUSTS (1860), 3 L. 347. Direction to hold dividends on same conditions as real estate.]—Testator, having devised his real estates in strict settlement, bequeathed his personal estate, in trust, as far as the nature of it would admit, for the persons who, for the time being, might have the ownership & be in the possession of his real estates under the limitations of his will; & then directed that those persons, under letters of attorney & powers from the trustees, which he empowered & required them to grant, should receive the yearly dividends which might arise out of the public or other funds, & the yearly interest which might arise from other parts of his personal property, under the same restrictions & limitations & to the same extent on which they held his real estates:—Held: testator's personal estate was to be enjoyed in specie, notwithstanding it consisted, in part, of long annuities & Bank Stock.—NEVILLE v. FORTESCUE (1848), 16 Sim. 333; 12 Jur. 908; 60 E. 348. Trusts to take rents, issue & profits.]—Testator after directing payment of his debts, & charging the same upon his real & personal estate, gave, devised, & bequeathed all his real & personal estate, both freehold, leasehold, copyhold, & of every other kind whatsoever, to trustees, their heirs, exors., & administrators, upon trust thereout to set apart & invest in Bank Stock a sufficient sum to provide for the payment of two annuities mentioned in the will, & subject to the payment thereof, & of his debts, upon trust to permit his wife to receive the rents, issues, profits, dividends, & proceeds of his said real & personal estate for her life, subject as to such part thereof as should be leasehold to the payment of the rent, & performance of the covenants contained in the respective leases thereof; & from & after her decease, upon trust to convey certain of his freehold estates to pltf. in fee, & as to the residue of his estate & property, both real & personal, of every kind & description, including the sum of Stock set apart for payment of the annuities after the decease of the annuitants, testator gave, devised, & bequeathed the same to pltf., his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, according to their several natures & qualities respectively, for his & their own absolute use & benefit:—Held: upon bill filed to charge the exors. for having allowed the widow to enjoy certain sums of long annuities, part of the estate in specie, the tenant for life had been properly allowed to enjoy the residuary estate in specie.—SIMPSON v. EARLES (1847), 11 Jur. 921.

353. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his real & personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay or permit his widow to receive the income & profits; & after her death he gave the capital over. The will contained no direction as to the conversion of his estate. Part of testator's estate consisted of £12,000 invested in a partnership. Under a stipulation in the deed of partnership, the surviving partner gave a warrant of attorney to the exors. of testator, securing payment of the £12,000, by instalments of £1,500 a year, with interest at 5 per cent. on the unpaid balances:—Held: the rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, as applied to this case, required the trustees not to convert the property but to set a value upon it, & to give the tenant for life 4 per cent. on the value & to invest the residue of the surplus income, paying the income of these investments to the tenant for life, & appropriating the corpus to the remainderman.—MEYER v. SIMONSEN (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 723; 21 L. 356. Gift of leaseholds subject to annuity to remainderman.]—Testator gave all his residuary real estate & his stock, mtges., & securities for money, & all other his personal estate & effects to his wife & his son, upon trust for his wife for life, subject to an annuity for his son; & after her death, as to all the devised & bequeathed freehold & residuary real & personal estate, of which his wife was to have the yearly interest, upon trust for his son absolutely. Testator left leaseholds, as to which at the time of his death he was liable to the landlord for repairs, & they were afterwards repaired at the widow's expense:—Held: the widow was entitled to the leaseholds in specie, the repairs were to be borne by the residue, & not by the tenant for life.—HARRIS v. POYNER (1852), 1 Drew. 174; 21 L. 357. Authority to executors to enter into partnership with third party—Leaving testator's capital in partnership.]—(1) Testator authorised his exors. to enter into a partnership with his brother, on such terms as they should think fit, & leave his capital therein. The exors. did so, & the articles of partnership stipulated that interest at 5 per cent. should be paid on testator's capital, & that part of the exor.'s profits should be left in the concern "as additional capital":—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to the interest, but the share of the profits retained as additional capital must, as between the tenant for life & remainderman, be considered as capital & not income.

(2) The case of Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante, & other similar cases rest on this principle, that where a testator leaves property which is wearing out, the tenant for life of the residue cannot, in the absence of any direct expression for that purpose in the will, enjoy the property in specie, that the property must be realised, & that the tenant for life can only have interest on the amount thus realised (ROMILLY, M.R.).—STROUD v. GWYER (1860), 28 Beav. 130; 2 L. 358. Discretion given to trustees.]—Testator, after a specific bequest, gave all his residuary estate, both real & personal, to trustees, whom he also appointed exors. upon trust, as soon as conveniently might be after his death, to sell so much & such part thereof as they might think necessary for paying all his mtge. & other just debts & funeral & testamentary expenses; & he directed the trustees, out of the moneys to arise from such sale & other his residuary estate, to pay all such sums of money as might at the time of his decease be charged on his freehold or leasehold estates by way of mtge. & all other his just debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, & to invest so much of the moneys as might remain after such payments; & to stand possessed of such investments & all other his residuary estate & the income thereof upon trust for several persons successively for their respective lives, with remainders over. Part of testator's residuary estate consisted of a leasehold, which was at the time of his death subject to a mtge. Shortly after testator's death, the trustees paid off the mtge. out of testator's estate:—Held: upon the construction of the will, the trustees had a discretion as to what part of testator's estate should be converted; the ct. could not interfere with such discretion, at all events if a considerable time had elapsed since it had been exercised; & the tenants for life were entitled to enjoy the leaseholds in specie.—Re SEWELL'S ESTATE (1870), L. By his will he devised it to trustees upon trust to sell "when, in their discretion, it may seem advisable;" & he directed that the rents "& profits" should, until sale, be considered as part of his personal estate, & be applicable & applied in such manner as the dividends or interest to arise from the investments of the sale moneys. He then gave the income of the investments to a tenant for life, with remainder, as to the capital, over.

Royalties became payable after testator's death. The trustees did not sell for ten years, but allowed the brick field to be worked out, being of opinion that by holding the land for the present they might sell it at a higher price afterwards for building purposes:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to the royalties absolutely, & not merely to the income which they would have produced if invested.—MILLER v. MILLER (1872), L. The will contained a power for the trustees to postpone such sale & conversion "for so long as they may think fit," & a direction that the income arising from his unconverted personal estate should be paid & applied in the same manner as the income of the moneys produced by such conversion would be payable or applicable. The ships were not sold until two years after testator's death, & in the interval made several voyages, from which large profits resulted:—Held: such profits must be treated as income & not capital, & were, therefore, payable to the tenant for life.—LEAN v. LEAN (1875), 32 L. 361. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate, real & personal, to trustees to pay to his wife the rents, issues & profits, for life for her own absolute use & benefit, & after making bequests of leaseholds, but not directing conversion, & of moneys, he gave the residue of his estate to five persons named equally. He authorised & empowered his trustees to allow the moneys which he possessed to remain in the same state of investment in which they should find them at his decease, unless circumstances should render it advisable to dispose of his bank shares. Testator's estate consisted (inter alia) of a sum of long annuities:—Held: the widow was not entitled to enjoy the annuities in specie, but they must be treated as having been converted at the death of testator.—PORTER v. BADDELEY (1877), 5 Ch. At the death of testator part of his personal estate consisted of securities not of a wasting nature & not specifically authorised. In an action for the administration of the estate the Chief Clerk found that some of these securities were proper to be continued, & that others were proper to be called in:—Held: the tenants for life under the will were entitled to receive in specie the income of those unauthorised securities which were retained, & which were not of a wasting nature.—Re SHELDON, NIXON v. SHELDON (1888), 39 Ch. 365. ——.]—Where a power is coupled with a trust or duty, the ct. will enforce the power & timely exercise of the power, but will not interfere with the discretion of the trustees as to the particular time or manner of their bonâ fide exercise of it.

The question which I have to decide is, whether the trustees of a voluntary settlement should be ordered to sell at once certain leasehold premises, & invest the proceeds of sale so as to equalise as far as possible the income between a tenant for life & those entitled in remainder. There is undoubtedly a duty upon the trustees to sell the leaseholds some time. I think their power of sale is coupled with a trust or duty, which the ct. will enforce if the trustees neglect to act in a proper & timely manner, but the ct. will not interfere with the discretion which the trustees possess as to the particular time or manner when & in which they will exercise their power, so long as their conduct is bonâ fide, & they act fairly between the beneficiaries (CHITTY, J.).—Re BURRAGE, BURNINGHAM v. BURRAGE (1890), 62 L. 366. ——.]—Testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, & investment of the proceeds in specified securities, with power to the trustees in their absolute discretion to retain any securities or property belonging to him at his death unconverted, for such period as they should think fit, & declared that his trustees should stand possessed of "the stocks, funds, shares, & securities for the time being constituting or representing the residuary personal estate & effects thereinbefore bequeathed, & of the income thereof," upon trust to pay the income to certain persons for life with remainders over.

The estate of testator comprised certain American bonds, which were not included among the securities authorised by the will as investments, but were retained by the trustees in exercise of the discretion given to them. These bonds, which bore interest at 6 per cent., were redeemable at par at a future date, & their present market value was considerably above par:—Held: the tenants for life were entitled to the whole net income of the bonds so retained.—Re THOMAS, WOOD v. THOMAS, [1891] 3 Ch. 482; 60 L. Part of testator's property consisted of the reversion, expectant on the death of his mother, of funds settled on her marriage of which she was tenant for life. The trustees did not convert this reversionary interest during the mother's life:—Held: the discretionary power of sale given by the will to the trustees excluded the application of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, & the personal representative of the mother was not, after her death, entitled to any part of the proceeds of the sale of the reversion.—Re PITCAIRN, BRANDRETH v. COLVIN, [1896] 2 Ch. 199; 65 L. By a codicil testator empowered his trustees to carry on his businesses of a colliery owner & farmer, & gave them a general discretion "to retain any investments" belonging to him at his death without being responsible for any loss occasioned thereby. Testator was a director of a coal co., limited, which had wide powers of engaging in colliery & other businesses under its articles & memorandum of assocn., & possessed a considerable reserve fund. At the time of his death the testator was possessed of 336 fully paid up shares of £50 each in the coal co., & in pursuance of their power under the codicil the trustees retained them:—Held: the shares were hazardous, but not wasting securities, & the power to retain investments was sufficient to exclude the operation of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante. The tenant for life was, therefore, entitled to the income of the shares so long as the trustees thought fit to retain them.—Re BATES, HODGSON v. BATES, [1907] 1 Ch. 22; 76 L. J. Ch. 29; 95 L. Testator declared that his trustees might permit any part of his personal estate, house, & ground rents to remain unconverted so long as they should think fit; that the rents, profits, & income should be paid & applied as the income of the proceeds of sale of the residuary estate would be payable; & he further gave them power to postpone the sale of his house, ground rents, & investments until the death of his wife or until desired by his wife. S. died in Mar. 1913 possessed, among other property, of a life interest of H. of the annual value of about £244 in property held on the trusts of a will, & of two policies of insurance on the life of H. the annual premiums on which together amounted to about £60. The whereabouts of H. were not known, & there was a difficulty in selling the life interest:—Held: the trustees had power to retain the life interest & the policies unsold; the widow of S. was entitled to the whole of the instalments of income from the life interest while unconverted; & the premiums on the policies ought to be paid out of capital as being part of the costs, charges, & expenses of administering the estate.—Re SHERRY, SHERRY v. SHERRY, [1913] 2 Ch. 508; 83 L. Testator's estate at the date of his death comprised some small leasehold properties & divers investments which were not authorised by the will but which had not yet been sold or converted by the trustees. No appropriation of the children's shares had yet been made:—Held: as between tenants for life & remaindermen, the tenants for life were entitled to receive the whole of the income of the residuary estate in its actual state of investment including the income of any unauthorised investments, whether wasting or permanent, retained by the trustees under their discretionary power to postpone sale & conversion.—Re GODFREE, GODFREE v. GODFREE, [1914] 2 Ch. 110; 83 L. 373. ——.]—Testator by clause 6 of his will gave all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale & conversion & to hold the net proceeds as to one moiety upon trust to invest & pay the income to his wife during widowhood, with a gift over, & as to the other moiety upon trust to invest & pay the income to his two daughters for life as tenants in common, with gifts over; clause 9 empowered the trustees to postpone the sale & conversion of all or any part of the estate for so long as they thought fit; & clause 11 empowered the trustees to permit his personal estate invested at his decease upon "any stocks, funds or securities whatsoever yielding income to continue in the same state of investment" so long as they should think fit.

Testator at his death held shares in Canadian land cos. which were valuable & paid good dividends, but were of a wasting character & did not come within the investment clause in the will:—Held: the shares were "stocks" within the meaning of that word in clause 11; under clause 11 the trustees could retain the shares, & the tenants for life were entitled to receive in specie all the dividends from the shares.—Re INMAN, INMAN v. INMAN, [1915] 1 Ch. 187; 84 L. 374. Direction to convert on death of tenant for life.]—Testator by his will gave all his residuary estate, including certain leasehold estates, some of which were reversionary, to his trustees upon trust for his wife for life, & after her death to be divided into seven shares for the benefit of his seven children, & if A. W., one of his sons, should die under twenty-one, his share to accrue to testator's other children living at his decease, or their issue. The shares of the daughters were settled. The hotchpot clause provided that his son J. & his daughters H. & C. should bring in the sum of £1,000 each, before division of his residuary estate.

A. W. died before testator under twenty-one. The other six children survived him & attained twenty-one. C., one of the daughters named in the hotchpot clause, & her husband, died in the widow's lifetime leaving children. The widow died in 1865:—Held: on the construction of the will, the trustees were not bound to have converted the leasehold property on the death of the widow.—LANE v. BROWN (1871), 25 L. T. 152.

After the wife's death the residuary estate was to be sold; & there was a subsequent proviso giving the trustees a discretionary power of conversion in her lifetime:—Held: the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, did not apply, but the widow was entitled in specie to the annual income of testator's estate as it existed at the time of his death.—GREAVES v. SMITH (1874), 29 L. T. 798; 22 W. R. 388.

376. Direction to treat profits as income until conversion.] — Testator devised & bequeathed his real & personal estate upon usual trusts for sale & conversion, the proceeds to be invested & to be held upon trust for his wife for life, &, after her death, for his children. The will contained the usual power to postpone the sale & conversion of the real & personal estate, & the usual direction that until sale & conversion the rents, profits, & income thereof should be paid & applied to the same persons & in the same manner as the income of the trust estate. The will contained no reference whatever to the business of testator, which comprised the bulk of his estate. The exors. carried on the business for nearly two years with a view to its sale as a going concern, & the question arose whether the profits of the business during that period were to be treated as capital or income:—Held: the exors. had power to carry on the business for a reasonable period with a view to its sale as a going concern; &, as testator had expressly directed that the profits of his personal estate until conversion were to be treated as income, the general rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, did not apply, & therefore the widow was entitled to the profits of the business.—Re CHANCELLOR, CHANCELLOR v. BROWN (1884), 26 Ch. 377. ——.]—Testator devised & bequeathed the residue of his property, whether real or personal, to trustees, upon trust for sale & conversion at such times & in such manner as they should think fit, but as to his business carried on in Sicily that they should wind up & dispose of the same as soon as practicable after his death, & if possible within twelve months thereof. There was express power to postpone the conversion of any part of his property other than the business. He then gave his wife a life interest in the income of his estate, &, subject thereto, his infant daughter was entitled to the whole estate contingently on attaining twenty-one or being married. The will contained a subsequent declaration by testator that "all the income arising from my estate" should, until conversion, be applied as if it were income arising from the proceeds of the conversion, no part thereof being liable to be retained as capital.

Upon a summons to determine whether the profits of the business earned since testator's death should be treated as income or be divided between capital & income:—Held: the expression "all the income arising from my estate" included the profits arising from the business; there was no sufficient ground for limiting the application of the clause giving to the tenant for life the income of unconverted property to that part of the estate which was subject to the discretionary power to postpone; & the widow was therefore entitled to the profits of the business.—Re ELFORD, ELFORD v. ELFORD, [1910] 1 Ch. 814; 79 L. 379. Direction to trustees to carry on business.]—Testator gave all his real & personal estate to trustees upon trust as to one fourth part for the children of A. E. L., as to another fourth for A. B. F., as to another fourth the income thereof to P. H., & as to the remaining fourth for W. H., in each case for their lives, & he declared that if any of them died without issue their share should form part of his residuary estate; & he gave his household furniture, books, pictures, paintings, engravings, plate, linen, china, & other effects to the said A. B. F. & P. H. in equal shares. On an originating summons asking what estates & interests in the estate were taken by the above-mentioned persons:—Held: the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, was not applicable to any share except that given upon trust for P. H., & testator having directed his trustees to carry on his business the beneficiaries other than P. H. were entitled to the profits thereof as they arose.—Re HAMMERSLEY, HEASMAN v. HAMMERSLEY (1899), 81 L. T. 150.

380. Absolute gift subject to executory limitation.]—The reason of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante, is not generally applicable to an absolute gift subject to an executory limitation.

By his will testator gave all his property to his wife, & by a codicil to his will, after reciting that G. M. was the adopted daughter of himself & his wife & that he was desirous of providing for her in the event of his wife dying without issue leaving her surviving, he directed that in such event the gift in his will in favour of his wife should take effect as if the name of G. M. had been substituted therein for that of his wife. Part of testator's estate consisted of a reversionary interest in a trust fund:—Held: having regard to the form of the gift in the codicil, testator intended that the property should be enjoyed in specie, & the reversion ought not to be sold.—Re BLAND, MILLER v. BLAND, [1899] 2 Ch. 336; 68 L. 381. Optional power of sale to tenant for life.]—Testator who was, at his decease in 1901, entitled to freehold & leasehold houses, held at a ground rent & let to weekly tenants, for a term of which thirty-nine years was unexpired, after bequeathing legacies, gave to his widow a life rent of all his property with power to sell & reinvest the proceeds on good security, after her death his property to be divided amongst his children:—Held: although no indication of testator's intention could be drawn from the use of the expression "life rent," which merely indicated testator's intention to give his widow a life interest in his property, yet the optional power of sale given to the widow, the life tenant, furnished sufficient indication of testator's intention that she should enjoy his leasehold property in specie to exclude the operation of the rule of conversion in Howe v. Dartmouth, Earl, No. 265, ante.—Re BENTHAM, PEARCE v. BENTHAM (1906), 94 L. T. 307.

382. Direction to convert with consent of tenant for life.]—R. by will gave all his residuary estate to the Public Trustee upon trust with the consent of his wife, to sell & convert, with power, with the like consent, to postpone sale & conversion for such time as he should think fit, & to hold the proceeds upon trust, with such consent as aforesaid, to invest the same upon specified investments & to pay the income to his wife during her life.

Testator's estate comprised investments not authorised by his will, which produced a larger income than 4 per cent.:—Held: as both conversion & postponement of conversion were subject to the wife's consent, her position was the same as if conversion was postponed by the will until after her death, & she was entitled to the income in specie.—Re ROGERS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. ROGERS, [1915] 2 Ch. 437; 84 L. 383. Validity of gift.]—(1) A right of pre-emption given by will, whether at a price expressed or to be fixed by the trustees, will be executed: the construction in the latter case being a reasonable price, to be ascertained by reference to the master. But to pass such right to the heir or devisee the intention to accept the offer must appear by some act, or, at least, by will. In this case, the will directing, that A. or whoever shall after testator's decease be entitled to estates in settlement may have the refusal, A. having died without showing such intention, & a tenant for life of part of the settled estates, not by the settlement, but under a recovery by A., not answering the description:—Held: the right did not then exist in any one.

(2) If testator goes no farther than to propose by his will an offer to a particular person at a price, to be fixed by his trustees, & that person does not act in his life, signifying what he will do, I do not conceive, the interest he has can be longer than his life; or, that it will descend to his real representative, to be paid for by his personal estate (LORD ELDON, C.).—RADNOR (EARL) v. SHAFTO (1805), 11 Ves. 448; 32 E. B. subject & on condition that he should grant an underlease to C. The original rent of each of these two houses was £18 7*s.* 6*d.* C. D. died in the lifetime of the widow, & on her death his exor. claimed an underlease:—Held: the gift was not personal to C. The son died very soon after his father, testator, also leaving a will whereby he appointed exors. Testator's wife & sister being also dead:—Held: the option to purchase the hotel was a right personal to the son, & could not be exercised after his death by his exors.—Re COUSINS, ALEXANDER v. CROSS (1885), 30 Ch. The brother signified his intention to purchase within the month, & required an abstract of the title. None was furnished to him within two months after the signification of his intention to purchase, & the purchase-money was not paid at the expiration of that time:—Held: the right of pre-emption was lost.—BROOKE v. GARROD (1857), 2 De G. & J. 62; 27 L. "all my interest & goodwill in my deceased brother's farm, together with the plough & winnowing machine":—Held: on the death of the widow, there was a gift of property to A. on the condition of paying a price for it, & this option was exercisable by his exor. after his death.—BELSHAW v. ROLLINS, [1904] 1 I. C. had formerly been in partnership with S. in the brewery business. Part of the property of testatrix connected with the brewery was, at her death, subject to a mtge. :—Held: (1) upon the construction of the codicil, coupled with the facts of the case, that M. was entitled to purchase at three-fourths of its value, not only the actual brewery & the property lying within its precincts, but also the public-houses belonging to testatrix, & which were held by her for the purposes of her trade, the tenants thereof being bound to take their beer from her brewery; (2) M. was entitled to purchase the equity of redemption of the property in mtge. at three-fourths of its value, & then to take the property subject to the mtge.—WAITE v. MORLAND (1866), 14 L. The two houses were subject to a mtge. for £300. The son gave notice to the trustees of his intention to exercise the option & took out a summons to determine whether the option gave him a right to a conveyance free from incumbrances:—Held: the son was not an heir or devisee & Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (c. 113), s. 1, did not apply, & he was entitled to have the property conveyed to him free from the mtge.—Re WILSON, WILSON v. WILSON, [1908] 1 Ch. 839; 77 L. 391. Alleged advancement by testator during lifetime—Parol declarations.]—Testator, by his will, directed that his son H. should have the option of purchasing the good will, etc., of his business. The purchase-money to form part of his residuary estate. Testator died in 1835, & H. who, from 1820, had managed the business & resided solely on the premises as apparent owner, claimed it as an advancement, & alleged a parol agreement between him & testator in 1825, & as proof thereof gave in evidence declarations of testator about that time to his neighbours, that he had set up H. in business, & had asked their custom for him:—Held: as there was no direct transfer or proof of change of possession, the parol declarations of testator could not countervail his solemn declaration expressed by his will.—SHARPE v. SHARPE (1840), 10 L. J. Ex. Eq. 2.

392. Effect of sale of property before exercise of option—Right of donee to surplus—Compulsory purchase.]—Land was devised in trust for testator's widow for life, & after her death for sale & division of the proceeds among his children equally, with a direction that the trustees should offer the land to testator's son, at a specified price, upon the death of the widow. 396. —— What amounts to exercise of option—Purchase not completed.]—Testator devised a house to trustees, upon trust to permit his son, at any time within three months after his death, to become the purchaser thereof, at the price of £4,000; & to sell & convey same to his son, his heirs, etc. But should his son not complete such purchase within the three months, then the trustees were, within twelve months from testator's death, to sell the house by auction. The son, within two months from his father's death, declared to the trustees his intention to purchase the house at the sum mentioned, but they did not deliver the title deeds to their solr., or instruct him to prepare the conveyance until the last day of the three months; & the son did not pay any part of the purchase-money, nor was any conveyance executed to him within the three months:—Held: he could not enforce his option.—DAWSON v. DAWSON (1837), 8 Sim. 346; Donnelly, 212; 59 E. case any one of the above named three legatees be able & willing to buy the farm, as aforesaid, at the price of $4,000, my exors. hereafter named shall so sell said farm." Each of the three legatees claimed the right to purchase the farm:—Held: the exors. were precluded from carrying out this direction in the will & they must sell the estate & divide the proceeds between the parties interested according to another provision in the will.—JEFFERY v. SCOTT (Ont.) d. Time fixed by will—"After three months after my decease."]—Testator devised land to his eldest son J., for life, & after his decease without issue to his grandson, pltf. in fee. By price had been stated to A. B.—LILFORD (LORD) v. KECK (1862), 30 Beav. 295 ; 54 E. R. 902.

399. —— —— Within twelve months of death of husband of testatrix—Death in lifetime of testator.]—Testatrix appointed an estate to her husband for life, remainder to trustees upon trust for her daughters, subject to a proviso that her son should be at liberty to purchase the estate for £8,000 on giving notice within twelve months after the husband's death, the right of pre-emption to determine if the notice were not given within that time ; & she limited the £8,000 on trusts for the daughters and their issue :—Held : the condition must be read as meaning within twelve months after the estate came to the trustees, & a notice given within twelve months of testatrix's death, though two years after the death of her husband, was sufficient to entitle the son to the option of purchase.—EVANS v. STRATFORD (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 142 ; 10 L. T. 713 ; 10 Jur. N. S. 861 ; 71 E. R. 416.

400. —— —— Where price to be fixed by arbitration.]—Testator gave to his children in succession an option to purchase certain property at a price to be fixed by arbn. within a prescribed time, & declared that the time to be allowed to each of his children for exercising the option was to be two calendar months, within which time he or she, in the event of purchasing, should enter into such an agreement for completion as the arbitrators should approve. The award was left, on May 5, at the office of the solr. of the trustees & testator's family, who also acted for the eldest son. The solr., on May 7, wrote to the eldest son, informing him of the price. The son, on June 16, replied by letter that he elected to take the estate at the price, & went on to ask that if he had to sign any agreement it might be forwarded to him. He signed, on July 6, an agreement approved by the arbitrators, & shortly after completed the purchase. The son having sold the property & filed a bill for specific performance :—Held : the title was marketable, for the two months ought to be reckoned, not from the date of the award, but from the time when it was first communicated to the son ; & thus the formal agreement was signed within the two months, & semble, the option was effectually exercised by the letter of June 16.—AUSTIN v. TAWNEY (1867), 2 Ch. 402. —— —— "Fair & reasonable value"—How far conclusive.]—Testator gave to his son the option of purchasing an estate, at what to his trustees "should seem a fair & reasonable value." The trustees had a valuation made which amounted to £1,500, the valuation made at the instance of the parties interested in the produce exceeded that by one-third :—Held : the trustees having fixed what they considered "a fair & reasonable value," having authority to do so, it was incumbent on pltf. to show that it was fraudulent, in order to prevent the son's purchasing at £1,500.—EDMONDS v. MILLETT (1855), 20 Beav. 54 ; 52 E. 403. The grandson did not first express his desire to purchase. . . . 406. Payment of interest—Price to be debited against share of reversion—From what time payable—Time of distribution of estate.]—Testator by his will gave each of his sons in succession, according to seniority, the option of succeeding to his business, & declared that the son electing to do so should be debited with the value thereof in the division of his residuary estate, &, if the value should exceed the amount of such son's expectant share therein at the time the option was declared, he should refund the excess to testator's residuary estate. Then, after giving certain legacies to his other children, sons at twenty-five & daughters at twenty-one or marriage, which were to carry interest from his death applicable for maintenance, testator gave his residuary estate upon trusts for sale, conversion, & investment & payment of certain annuities & directed the trustees to accumulate the surplus income at compound interest for twenty-one years from his death, if any child of his should so long live & be under twenty-one & on the attainment of twenty-one by his youngest living child, which was to be the period of distribution, to hold the trust fund in trust for his children then living as tenants in common. The will also empowered the trustees, at any time before the period of distribution, to make advances out of the capital of the trust premises in favour of any of his sons, the sums so advanced to be taken in part satisfaction of the shares in the trust premises to which the sons advanced should become entitled. Testator died in 1883 leaving three sons & two daughters. The eldest son in 1884 elected to succeed to the business, the value of which £15,000, did not at the time exceed the amount of his expectant share. The youngest child attained twenty-one in 1894 ; & meanwhile the second son had under the powers of advancement received sums amounting to £8,200 :—Held : in debiting the eldest son with the value of the business taken by him, he ought not to be debited with interest thereon from the time he took it, but only from the period of distribution ; as to the sums advanced to the second son no interest ought to be charged thereon prior to the period of distribution.—Re DALLMEYER, DALLMEYER v. DALLMEYER, [1896] 1 Ch. 372 ; 65 L. a codicil he declared that if J. should "after three months after my decease" deposit in the hands of any person to be chosen by pltf.'s parents £100, to be invested for pltf.'s benefit, then the land should go to J. in fee :—Held : payment of the £100 within a reasonable time after three months from testator's decease was sufficient : & "after" should not be read as "within."—HYLAND v. THROCKMORTON, 29 U. SUB-SECT. 5.—RIGHT OF SELECTION.

A. Express Right.

407. Validity.]—(1) If a will shows that testator intends to give a particular property to a legatee, & owing to testator having several properties answering the description in the will of the particular property given you are unable to say, either from the will itself or from extrinsic evidence, which of the several properties testator referred to, then on principle the gift must fail for uncertainty (ROMER, J.).

(2) Testator who has several properties all having the same description, may by his will give one of them to a legatee, & leave the choice of that one to the legatee; & such a gift is clearly valid (ROMER, J.).

(3) If testator gives one of such properties to a legatee without saying more, then the reasonable inference is that the testator intended the legatee to select (ROMER, J.).

(4) Where testator gives one of such properties, to each of several legatees, then he intends primâ facie to give the right of selection to the legatees according to the priority of the bequests (ROMER, J.).—ASTEN v. ASTEN, [1894] 3 Ch. 260; 63 L. J. Ch. 834; 71 L. T. 228; 8 R. 496.

S. for her natural life, reserving to her full power to will away any part or proportion of his residuum at her decease; & after that period he bequeathed the residue of what was undisposed of by his wife, to his daughter, & the heirs of her body for ever:—Held: the wife had a power of appointment over the whole residuary estate.—COOKE v. FARRAND (1816), 7 Taunt. 122; 2 Marsh. 421; 129 E. R. 49.

409. —— ——.]—Testator gave all his household furniture, linen, wearing apparel, books, plate, wines, fixtures, statues, china, horses, carriages & everything in his house to trustees, of whom his wife was one, & directed that all his household property "as aforesaid" should, after his decease, be sold, "with the exception of such articles, whatever they be, that my dear wife may desire to retain for her own use; which I hereby empower her to appropriate to her own use":—Held: this bequest did not enable the widow to take the whole of the household property, but intimated a confidence that she would not take the whole; she was empowered to make her selection as well from amongst the statues, pictures & ornamental articles as from the ordinary furniture; & she was entitled absolutely to the articles which she might select.—KENNEDY v. KENNEDY (1853), 10 Hare, 438; 1 W. After her death he directed such "house or houses" to be sold:—Held: the widow must elect between the two houses, & was not entitled to occupy both.—HARBY v. MOORE (1860), 3 L. T. 209; 6 Jur. N. S. 883.

411. —— ——.]—Gift by testator of his plate to trustees upon trust to permit his widow "to have & appropriate absolutely to herself such parts thereof as she should signify in writing her desire to possess":—Held: the widow was entitled to the whole of the plate.—ARTHUR v. MACKINNON (1879), 11 Ch. By his codicil he empowered B. to choose everything he might desire from the furniture at the house, except certain specified articles:—Held: testator intended B. to take all, or as much as he liked, of the furniture in question other than the excepted articles, & was not bound to leave a substantial portion thereof.—Re SHARLAND, KEMP v. ROZEY (No. 2) (1896), 74 L. 413. Priority of choice—Right exercisable at twenty-one.]—Testator gave to his son, in case he should live to attain twenty-one, such part of his real estate as his son should choose, but not exceeding the yearly value of £350, & to his daughter such part of his real estate as should remain after his son should have made his choice, or of the whole of his real estate in case his son should not live to choose his part as she should choose, but not exceeding the yearly value of £360:—Held: the son was entitled to priority of choice on attaining twenty-one, & there was to be no apportionment, although he might not leave for the daughter lands of the yearly value of £360.—WEIGALL v. BROME (1833), 6 Sim. 99; 58 E. R. 532.

414. Bequest of money or annuity—Who may exercise right.]—Bequest of £500, or an annuity of £25 for life:—Held: not to give the option to the legatee, but to the parties interested in the property, subject to the annuity.—WILSON v. WILSON (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 152; 9 L. After the date of the will the marriage was declared null by the Divorce Ct., in a suit brought by the wife against testator. After this testator died leaving the lady surviving:—Held: (1) as the lady did not at testator's death fill the position of testator's widow, she could not take the annuity; (2) she could not take the £2,000, for an option to take a legacy instead of an annuity could not exist if there was no right to take the annuity.—Re BODDINGTON, BODDINGTON v. CLAIRAT (1884),

By a letter to the clergyman, dated the day her will was executed, but not intended to be, & not in fact delivered to him until after her death, she said that it would be "gratifying to her memory" if he of his "own free will" would dedicate the acre of land as a site for a church; he did select an acre for that purpose, but subsequently entered into an arrangement with the trustees of her will, whereby the trustees sold the acre so selected & granted him permission to select another acre in lieu thereof. The clergyman died without having selected another acre:—Held: the permission to make a second selection was ultra vires, & the purchase-money produced by the acre originally selected belonged to the personal representatives of the clergyman absolutely.—LITTLEDALE v. BICKERSTETH (1876), 24 W. 421. —— —— Shares.]—(1) Testator at the time of his death was entitled to 120 shares in the G. W. Ry. co. For 38 of these he had been an original subscriber, & had signed the Parliamentary contract, undertaking to pay the amount subscribed within ten years to the directors to be appointed by the Railway Act. The remaining 82 shares had been purchased by him as scrip. By the Act, which was passed in his lifetime, the directors had power to compel payment of the moneys subscribed, & also to make calls, & to enforce the payment of such calls by action, or otherwise to declare the shares forfeited, & to sell the shares. The Act also gave the proprietors of shares the right of sale & transfer, declaring in effect that the vendor ceased to be liable for calls after a proper memorial of such sale & transfer. All the calls had not been paid on the shares at the time of testator's death. After his death the co. passed a resolution declaring that the proprietors of shares should be entitled to 2 new quarter shares in respect of each whole share. By his will testator had bequeathed 30 shares to A. & 30 shares to B., declaring that the legacies should not be deemed specific so as to be capable of ademption:—Held: (1) the legatees were entitled to a proportional number of new quarter shares; (2) the legatees, & not the exors., had the right of electing out of which class of shares their legacies should be delivered to them.

W. devises lands to his second son T., upon condition that T. or his heirs shall pay to his grand-children, the children of T., £90, to be equally divided among them, & on default of payment, a clause of entry & distress. T. died in testator's lifetime; the son of the eldest son of testator entered on the lands as heir-at-law, & sold them. The legacy to the children of T., testator's second son, is a continuing charge on the lands in the hands of the purchaser, & they are entitled to be satisfied for same with interest.

This is not a mere condition, but a conditional limitation, there being an express limitation over to the legatees in case of non-payment, who were to enter & hold in the nature of tenants by elegit; & there are many nice distinctions on these conditions arising by wills. A. devises lands to B. on condition to pay C. a sum of money, & no clause of entry; this is no charge on the estate to give the legatee of the money a lien on the lands, but the heir-at-law shall enter & take advantage of the breach of the condition, & yet in this ct. he shall be considered only as a trustee for the legatee (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—WIGG v. WIGG (1739), West temp. Hard. 677; 1 Atk. 382; 26 E. A. Fraud.

438. Fraud—False assumption of character by beneficiary—False character motive of testator's bounty.]—If a legacy is given to a person under a particular character, which he has falsely assumed, & which alone can be supposed the motive of the bounty, the rule of the civil law is adopted, & the legacy fails.

Therefore, where a legacy was given by a woman to a man in the character of her husband, whom she supposed & described as such, but who at the time of the marriage ceremony with her had a wife living, the ct. in respect of his conduct held him not entitled; but inclined to think it would be otherwise, where from circumstances not moving from the legatee himself the description is inapplicable; as where testator gives a legacy to a child from motives of affection, supposing it his own, but is imposed upon in that respect.—KENNELL v. ABBOTT (1799), 4 Ves. 802; 31 E. B. Undue Influence.

448. What constitutes—Necessity for coercion.]—In order to constitute undue influence which will impeach a will there must be coercion. It is only when the will of the person who becomes testator is coerced into doing that which he or she does not desire to do that it is undue influence. If the act is shown to be the result of the wish & will of testator at the time, then, however, immoral may be the consideration which brought it about, apart from fraud, it is not undue influence.—BAUDAINS v. RICHARDSON, [1906] A. 486. Child born before death of testator—Mentioned by name of other parent.]—Testator devised his real & personal property to trustees, upon trust for four children of M., whom he described by their respective names, "together with every other child born of the body of M. alive at my decease, or born within nine months afterwards, share & share alike," M. had two other children born after the date of the will, but before the date of a codicil to it; & these, as well as the four previously born, were all illegitimate. The children, born after the date of the will, are not entitled to any share of the property.—MORTIMER v. WEST (1827), 3 Russ. 370; 5 L. J. O. S. Ch. 181; 38 E. R. 615, L. C.

487. —— ——.]—Testator who had gone through the ceremony of marriage with M. L., his deceased wife's sister, who had two daughters, C. & E., by him, & who was enceinte with a third at the date of the will, gave a moiety of his property to trustees in trust for M. L. for life, & after her death for his reputed children C. & E., & all other children which he might have or be reputed to have by M. L., then born or thereafter to be born. The third child was born before testator's death, & was acknowledged by him as his child:—Held: the after-born child was entitled to share with her sisters under the will.

Testator's bounty is absolute & without control as to motive. & if he superadds to that the words "of whom I shall be the reputed father," giving to those words the fair meaning, the benigna constructio, which all the words of an instrument ought to have, I find no element of uncertainty. It does not mean, I conceive, that of which the gossip of the neighbourhood may spread a rumour or fame, but that reputation which springs from acknowledgment, conduct, & life (JAMES, L.J.).—OCCLESTON v. FULLALOVE (1874), 9 Ch. SUB-SECT. 9.—SLAYER OF TESTATOR.

504. Felonious slaying — General rule.] — The exors. of a person who has effected an insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife can maintain an action on the policy notwithstanding the fact that the death of the insured was caused by the felonious act of the wife. The trust created by the policy in favour of the wife under Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 11, having become incapable of being performed by reason of her crime, the insurance money forms part of the estate of the insured; & as between his legal representatives & the insurers no question of public policy arises to afford a defence to the action.

When the money is in the hands of the exors., the question arises how, under the circumstances, they must deal with it. If in consequence of the death of the insured having been caused by the crime of a person in whose favour the policy is expressed to be made, or to or upon whom the policy money is left by will or settled, such person is not entitled to insist on its being paid to him, but he nevertheless claims the money from the exors., they may then vouch the doctrine of public policy, & may say that by reason of it such person has forfeited his or her right to the money. What would be the consequence of that? The exors. cannot be entitled to keep the money to themselves. It seems to follow as a necessary result that they would hold it as part of the estate of testator (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—CLEAVER v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCN., [1892] 1 Q. B. 147; 61 L. J. Q. 505. —— Murder.]—The principle according to which a person who is guilty of feloniously killing another cannot take any benefit under that other person's will is based on public policy, & applies equally to a case of manslaughter as to one of murder.

A legatee who had been convicted of the manslaughter of her testator was held to be rightly dismissed from an action for probate of the will.—In the Estate of HALL, HALL v. KNIGHT & BAXTER, [1914] 1 P. 1; 83 L. J. P. 1; 109 L. T. 587; 30 T. L. R. 1; 58 Sol. Jo. 30, C. A.

506. —— ——.]—Where a man on a trial for murdering his brother was found insane at the time when he committed the act, & was indicted also for murdering his father, but that charge was not, in the event of the finding of the jury on the former charge, proceeded with, & where the father died intestate:—Held: there was no reason why the lunatic should not have taken a benefit under his father's will had he made a will & accordingly à fortiori he was entitled to take his proper share on his father's intestacy in the property of his father, the disposition of which was regulated by positive provisions of statute law.

Where a person is criminally responsible for the death, the felonious slaying, of another, whether the crime be murder or manslaughter, he cannot take anything under the will of the deceased. Hitherto it has never been suggested that there is any such incapacity or disqualification where the person guilty of the act of slaying deceased was innocent of any crime, as where deceased was killed accidentally or by misadventure, or his death was held to be a case of justifiable homicide (JOYCE, J.).—Re HOUGHTON, HOUGHTON v. HOUGHTON, [1915] 2 Ch. 173; 84 L. In 1884 she duly executed a will which did not expressly include this property, & in 1887 & 1889 she executed two revocable deeds poll, which were duly attested by two witnesses, whereby she appointed the settled property upon certain trusts from & after her decease :—Held : the deeds were testamentary instruments & entitled to probate, as, together with the will of 1884, constituting the last will of deceased.

(2) The true principle . . . appears to be that if there is proof, either in the paper itself or from clear evidence dehors, first, that it was the intention of the writer of the paper to convey the benefits by the instrument which would be conveyed by it if considered as a will ; secondly, that death was the event that was to give effect to it, then whatever may be its form it may be admitted to probate as testamentary. It is not necessary that testator should intend to perform or be aware that he has performed a testamentary act (SIR HANNEN, P.).—MILNES v. FODEN (1890), 15 P. D. 105 ; 59 L. J. P. 62 ; 62 L. PART V. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

512 i. General rule—Form immaterial—If intention testamentary.]—The form or want of form of a writing made in contemplation of death or intended to take effect upon that event does not affect its character as a holograph will where holograph wills are valid under the law, as in Manitoba, if the intention that it should be the maker's will can be discerned.—Re MITCHELL ESTATE (Man.), [1924] 1 D. L. R. 1039 ; [1924] 1 W. W. R. 481.—CAN.

512 ii. —— —— ——.]—The presumption is always against the validity of will which bears self-evident marks of its being unfinished, & it behooves those who assert its testamentary character to show distinctly that deceased intended the paper in its actual condition to operate as his will.—Re GILBERT'S WILL, 1 P. & B. 525.—CAN.

512 iii. —— —— ——.]—It is not essential to the validity of a testamentary writing that it contain words of gift, or be expressed in the form of a complete sentence, provided it implies a clear testamentary purpose on the part of deceased, & its meaning is intelligible.—COLVIN v. HUTCHINSON (1885), 12 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 947 ; 22 Sc. L. R. 632.—SCOT.

must show testamentary intention; & as the law in such cases lends its aid only to effect intention, the question is, whether such a paper, if treated as testamentary, will, in truth, give effect to deceased's intention, though the ct. cannot look at the effect of an instrument clearly testamentary on its face.

No case has gone the length of deciding, that because an instrument cannot operate in the form given to it, it must operate as a will; it may operate as a will if shown to have been written with a testamentary intention (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—KING'S PROCTOR v. DAINES (1830), 3 Hag. Ecc. 218; 162 E. R. 1136.

522. —— ——.]—A paper not dispositive, upon the face of it, nor shown to be by extrinsic evidence not entitled to probate.

It is undoubtedly true that the ct. is not precluded from granting probate of a paper on account of the form in which it is drawn up. Papers having less testamentary appearance than the present, which is addressed to the exors., have been admitted to probate, such, for instance, as deeds of gifts, notes of hand, drafts upon bankers, & others; the ct. only requiring to be satisfied that it was the intention of deceased, that they should be carried into effect after his death, although the purport of the instruments might not be strictly testamentary.

It is then necessary to consider the circumstances which are pleaded in these allegations from which the ct. is to collect, that this paper was written by deceased, animo testandi, for that I apprehend is necessary to be proved, where the paper, upon the face of it, does not purport to be of a testamentary nature; for there seems to be this distinction in the consideration of papers which are in their terms, dispositive, & those which are of an equivocal character, that the first will be entitled to probate, unless they are proved not to have been written animo testandi; whilst in the latter, the animus must be proved by the party claiming under it. . . .

I have already said, that the paper does not appear to me to be "per se," dispositive, neither do I think that the circumstances of its being found with the will & two codicils infers that deceased considered it to have, or intended to give it, a testamentary character . . . .

If this paper were clearly testamentary, the ct. would have no right to inquire whether deceased knew his right or not, but would be bound to grant probate of it, & leave its effect to be afterwards determined. But the case is very different where the question is, with what intention a paper, not clearly entitled to a testamentary character, was written, in such a case, a knowledge of the jus disponendi seems to be essential to the animus testandi, the latter could hardly exist without the former; & as I think it to be perfectly clear in this case that deceased was ignorant, that he possessed the jus disponendi of this stock, he cannot be considered to have written this paper with the intention of bequeathing it (SIR H. JENNER).—GRIFFIN & AMOS v. FERARD (1835), 1 Curt. 97; 163 E. R. 33.

523. —— ——.]—It is incumbent on a party setting up a paper as testamentary to show, by the contents of the paper itself, or by extrinsic evidence, that it is of that character & nature; that by the very identical paper the party deceased has given, or intended to give or supposed himself to have given, the particular legacy or bounty claimed. If the paper purports of itself to be testamentary, the party who opposes its admission to probate must, in order to get rid of it, show to this ct. that it was not made animo testandi; if the purport be equivocal, it must be shown, by the party setting it up, that it was made animo testandi (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—COVENTRY v. WILLIAMS (1844), 3 Curt. 787; 3 Notes of Cases, 164; 3 L. T. O. S. 452; 8 Jur. 699; 163 E. R. 902.

525. —— ——.]—Where something to suggest a doubt as to whether an instrument is intended to be testamentary appears upon the face of it, extrinsic evidence as to the circumstances is admissible of its execution, but the burden of proof is not thereby thrown upon the person propounding the instrument.

A holograph writing was found among the papers of a deceased person in a locked desk. It was signed by him & made a full & careful disposition of the whole of his property in such a form as to be a valid will according to the law of Scotland. It was headed "Notes of intended settlement," & dated. Deceased lived for several years after the date of this writing, & did not execute any other testamentary disposition:—Held: in the absence of any evidence that it was only intended as a memorandum for a future will, the heading did not prevent the writing from taking effect as a will.

What is said in Jarman on Wills is perfectly true, & true as to wills of personal as much as to wills of real estate: "The law has not made it requisite to the validity of a will that it should assume any particular form, or be couched in language technically appropriate to its testamentary character. It is sufficient that the instrument, however irregular in form & inartificial in expression, discloses the intention of the maker respecting the posthumous destination of his property; & if this appear to be the nature of its contents, any contrary title or designation which he may have given to it will be disregarded" (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—WHYTE v. POLLOK (1882), 7 App. Cas. 400; 47 L. or that my said personal property shall be divided among my children according to law" :—Held: this paper was, on the face of it, equivocal, & the testamentary intention of deceased should be proved. The evidence failing to support such intention, the paper pronounced against, & administration to deceased, as dead intestate, granted to the party having a majority of interests. —NAPPER v. NAPPER (1846), 10 Jur. 342.

570. —— —— Operating from death.]—By Mr. & Mrs. P.'s marriage settlement, estates in Kent & other counties, the lady's property, were settled on her for life, remainder to Mr. P. for life, if she should so appoint, remainder to their children, remainder as Mrs. P., by deed under her hand & seal, attested, etc., or by her will, signed & published in the presence of three witnesses, should appoint; remainder to Mrs. P. in fee, with a power of sale, & directions for reinvesting the proceeds in other estates, &, in the usual securities, in the interim, & that upon the reinvestment, the uses of the settlement should cease as to the sold estates. Mrs. P., by deed not attested as to her signature, at the foot of which she had written, without date, directions for her burial, appointed the estates, after her decease, to her husband for life, &, in default of children, to him in fee; & she revoked a prior deed of appointment. The estates were afterwards sold, & the proceeds invested in securities, but were never reinvested in lands, although their liability to be so was recognised by the parties. There was no issue of the marriage. Mrs. P. survived her husband, & applied part of the proceeds to her own use. At her death she was seised, exclusive of the settled property, of a mansion house, with outbuildings, gardens, & a small field adjoining it, & some cottages opposite to it, let to tenants, & was possessed of some personal estate, no part of which was in the name of a trustee. She devised the mansion house, with its appurtenances, & all other her real estates, to C. S., & bequeathed all her personal estate, whether in the name of herself or of any trustee, subject expressly to her debts & legacies, to other persons. After her death, the deed of appointment was found in her house, with the title deeds of the mansion house; but the revoked deed could not be found. Her debts & legacies greatly exceeded her assets:—Held: the former deed was not a testamentary instrument.—HOUGHAM v. SANDYS (1827), 2 Sim. 95; 6 L. J. O. S. Ch. 67; 57 E. R. 725.

"the sole claim to the before mentioned property, to be held by her during her life, & disposed of by her as she may deem proper at the time of her death; at the same time I wish it to be understood that I claim all right & title to the said property on my arrival in Great Britain, when the term of" E.'s "occupancy shall be considered at an end." "In witness," etc. The instrument was acted on as a power of attorney by E. Afterwards P. died in India, without returning to Great Britain, & left E. surviving:—Held: the instrument operated, on P.'s death, as a devise to E.—DOE d. CROSS v. CROSS (1846), 8 Q. The description of the cabinet was altered as to its dimensions by a note in the margin; there was also an alteration in the body of the instrument. The attesting clause was: "signed, sealed, & delivered in the presence of, the alterations & erasures in the margin whereof the initials H., are placed, being previously made." 574. —— Mutual contract between husband & wife.]—A husband & wife, by post-nuptial contract, dated 1850, reciting that their ante-nuptial contract dated 1817, had become unsuited to their present circumstances, agreed to a new arrangement of their individual property after the death of predeceasor. The husband bound himself & his heirs to make payment to the wife, should she survive him, of an annuity during her life of £2,000 a year, with the use of his house, furniture, wine, etc. The wife accepted this in full of all legal claims"; "& for which causes & on the other part" she "has given, granted, & disponed, as she does hereby give, grant, assign, & dispone from her, her heirs & successors, to & in favour" of the husband, "his heirs & assignees whomsoever, heritably & irredeemably, all & sundry her whole estate, goods, chattels, & effects, heritable & movable, real & personal, now pertaining & belonging to her or that shall happen to pertain & belong to her in any manner of way & wherever situated, at the time of her death," including her claims under the ante-nuptial contract. She then gave her husband power to uplift the whole heritable & movable estate, & nominated him "sole exor. & universal legator"; & constituted him & his aforesaid her assignees not only to the whole titles of her estate, but also to the rents payable in all time coming from "the last term of Whitsunday." The deed contained a power during the joint lives to alter. Part of the wife's movable estate consisted of a share of the residue of her grandfather's estate, given to her in life rent, exclusive of her husband, with, failing children, a general power of appointment over the corpus. The husband predeceased, bequeathing all his property to trustees. The husband's representatives, on the ground that this fund had not vested in the husband, claimed it as conditional institutes in the post-nuptial contract:—Held: the post-nuptial contract was not a testamentary deed, but a deed of mutual contract, & that the right which each party obtained was a right of credit which vested at once, & the share of residue passed by the husband's will & vested in his trustees.—M'ONIE v. WHYTE (1890), 15 App. Cas. 156, H. This was never enrolled in chancery. On the same day he made a will giving certain legacies, & appointing exors. most of whom were the persons named in the deed. These papers were never communicated by him to anybody. Just before his death he caused the papers to be produced from his drawes, & handed them to the persons attending his death bed. They were tied up with a memorandum which declared that they had been prepared in that form, under advice, to save the legacy duties, & in order that if probate duty was paid in the first instance it might be got back again in consequence of the covenant creating a debt to be paid out of the assets :—Held : the indenture was a deed & not a testamentary paper.—JEFFRIES v. ALEXANDER (1860), 8 H. "The inference would be from this that it was a paper from which it was intended that a more formal will should be drawn out; it is dated & subscribed, & it contains a complete disposition; still, however, if it rested here, the ct. must have considered it as imperfect, because it is described as "heads of a will" (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—BONE & NEWSAM v. SPEAR (1811), 1 Phillim. 345; 161 E. (2) If a paper is only what at its commencement it purports to be, namely, mere heads of instruction to the solr. to add a codicil, there would hardly be sufficient evidence to enable the ct. to pronounce for its validity; but if, on the other hand . . . something more is to be attributed to this paper than to a document intended to be mere heads of instruction, then the evidence given in support of it will be only in affirmance of that which is the legal character of the paper itself (SIR H. In July, 1917, while in captivity, he wrote a letter to his wife dealing with family matters of business & saying: "Tell M. (his solr.) this affects my will, which I want added to it at once." 607. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees for his wife for life, & after her death to his nephew R. "for his own use & benefit absolutely." After his death a letter was found addressed by him to R., which letter was expressed to be intended as an explanation of his will. He then repeated his "wish that the property should be" R.'s & hoped that he would be "kindly, considerate & liberal" to his relations, using the additional words "keeping the principal together & using the income arising therefrom." He wished that in a certain event R. should bequeath to H.'s or G.'s son all or the greater part of the property, the interest of which he bequeathed to his wife, & after her to R., adding that he wished it finally to benefit such nephew as R. might select as his successor. This letter was admitted to probate. The widow survived R., & he, by his will, gave the property to certain persons, present petitioners; on the death of the widow the surviving exor. paid the fund into ct. under Trustee Relief Act. A petition was presented by R.'s legatees, praying payment to them, & the prayer was opposed by the next of kin of testator, who contended that there was an intestacy:—Held: the letter, though undoubtedly a distinct testamentary instrument, was uncertain & did not revoke or cut down the express gift which the will contained. 611. Whether testamentary—"Memorandum of my intended will"—Signed & intended to operate.]—A paper, commencing "Memorandum of my intended will," but dispositive in terms, signed, & intended to operate if no more formal will was made, is, unless revoked, entitled to probate.

Neither instructions, nor a will drawn up therefrom, which, though in deceased's possession for several months, was not executed nor shown to be finally determined on, will, either as entitled to probate or as letting in an intestacy, revoke such a paper.—BARWICK v. MULLINGS (1829), 2 Hagg. 613. —— When written below signature to will.]—A. executed his will in Feb., & a codicil on the same paper in Dec. ; below the signature to the will, & before the commencement of the codicil, appeared a memorandum, which, from the evidence of the solr. who prepared the will, had been written on the paper before the execution of the will :—Held : the memorandum, being no part of the will as originally executed, was not entitled to probate by reason of the duly executed codicil of subsequent date, such codicil referring merely to the will.—In the Goods of WILLMOTT (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 36 ; 30 L. 615. —— Document duly executed—Offer of situation "to continue after my death."]—Where a paper duly executed as a will is not clearly on the face of it testamentary, the burden of proof lies on the party propounding it ; & the ct. must judge from its form, nature, contents & appearance whether it is testamentary.

The following document was duly executed in compliance with the Wills Act : "To G. L., I hereby offer you the situation of collector & overseer of my property at a salary of £3 3*s.* per week, with house rent to the amount of £25 a year, & all rates & taxes. I hereby further wish that the said G. L. shall continue in the aforesaid office, & with the same salary as aforesaid after my decease, & same allowances" :—Held : it was not testamentary.—THORNCROFT & CLARKE v. LASHMAR (1862), 2 Sw. & Tr. 479 ; 31 L. 616. —— —— "I wish my sister to have . . ."]—A duly executed paper in these terms "I wish my sister to have my bankbook for her own use," was held to be testamentary, the ct. being satisfied on the evidence that deceased, at the time of its execution, intended it to take effect after her death, & not as a present deed of gift.—COCK v. COOKE (1866), L. 619. —— —— When expressed to be testamentary.]—Pltf., who was the wife of deft., claimed £12,000 on an account stated, & there was produced at the trial a typewritten document, in which after referring to certain properties & shares, the husband said "The above properties & shares have been acquired by me with money advanced from Mrs. W.'s estate, which money has not been paid. These figures can be proved by a reference to Mr. P., Philadelphia, & his books. I therefore acknowledge the debt of £12,000 to my wife, M. P. W. After the properties have been realised & she has received this sum in cash, any balance should be divided equally amongst my four children, to the extent of £2,000 each, & if there is still any balance left, that I leave to my wife. In the event of there being any questions as to the amount owed to my wife, & should any dispute arise . . . in any case she is to receive from the estate £12,000, & the balance to be divided as stated above." The following was added in deft.'s handwriting : "Note. This document in the event of my death to be construed as my will, I having made no other. I appoint my wife as sole exor." Then followed the signatures of deft. & two witnesses. The husband denied that the money was due, his case being that he pretended that he owed his wife £12,000 so that, in the event of his death, she could get it without having to pay death duties. Alternatively, he said that the writing was executed by him, if at all, as his will, & not otherwise. Pltf. was not called & no evidence was given as to how she had obtained possession of the document :—Held : as the document was only to take effect on deft.'s death, & as pltf. had not shown any absolute acknowledgment of the debt by deft., the action failed.—WARWICK v. WARWICK (1918), 34 T. This amounts to a direction that the purchase-money for the house shall be so provided for; & evidence was admitted to show what was the order given by testator with reference to the cutting of timber.

appointed, to whom was bequeathed all the testator's personal estate, in joint tenancy. It bore date Dec. 2, 1834, & was signed by testator. The second, B., was declared to be deceased's will for disposing his estates as directed by his instructions. It declared his wish that his exors. should have all his property, & devised to them all his estates, real & personal, as tenants in common, but did not name them. It was dated Dec. 3, 1834, signed by testator, & attested by three witnesses. Both papers were prepared by, & were wholly in the handwriting of, deceased's attorney, who was one of the exors. named in paper A. A caveat having been entered, & further proofs required than were given upon the common Condidit, it appeared that the paper A., immediately after its execution, was taken possession by, & remained in the custody of, testator's attorney, until a short time previous to his decease, when it was brought to his house, & without his knowledge or authority fastened to the paper B., inclosed & sealed up in an envelope, & deposited in a bureau, where it was found the day following his decease. The Prerogative Ct. refused to grant probate to paper A., on the ground that it was superseded by paper B., which the ct. rejected as inoperative & ineffectual:—Held: upon a review of the evidence, it appeared that paper B. referred to & incorporated some other paper, which, under the circumstances proved, could only be paper A., & the two together were intended as, & formed, the last will of deceased.—HITCHINGS v. WOOD, WOOD v. HITCHINGS (1841), 2 Moo. 690. ——.]—Where a will refers to a paper, such paper cannot be incorporated with the will unless it is clearly identified with the description of it given in the will, & is shown to have been in existence at the time the will was executed. Both these matters must be established, & though there may be no doubt about the former, unless the latter also is proved there can be no incorporation of the paper with the will for such a purpose. The onus of establishing these two matters lies on the person who seeks to make the paper admissible for such a purpose. A will began, "I direct my exors. to pay the expenses of my funeral, & all my lawful debts, out of the proceeds of my property." It went on thus, "Whereas I am possessed of landed & chattel property, as stated in the annexed schedule, I direct my exors. to sell my landed property, namely," & then four separate pieces of landed property were named, "for its full value." Several legacies were then given, & then a fifth landed property was specially devised to I. W., a person fully described, with an ultimate remainder to T. T., & then came the gift of other legacies, & finally the will declared, "I constitute T. T." describing him, "my residuary legatee." The will was written on three sides of a sheet of paper, the signature & attestation were at the bottom of the third side, the schedule was on the fourth side; it was in the handwriting of testator, was signed by him, & bore the same date as the will. It described the four portions of landed estate, & as to the fifth landed estate said, it "is not included in the above schedule, being willed by me to I. W.: my exors. have no control over it." The witnesses who attested the will had not seen the schedule when they made their attestation:—Held: (1) as this schedule was not proved to have been written at the time of the execution of the will, it could not be incorporated with the will nor referred to for the purpose of assisting in its construction; (2) the will itself clearly directed the whole of testator's real estate, except the portion specifically devised to a particular person, to be turned into money, so as to be converted out & out, not for a special purpose only, but for the general objects of his will, &, after satisfying those objects, the surplus went to the residuary legatee, & not to the heir.—SINGLETON v. TOMLINSON (1878), 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. 691. Reference to document containing testamentary directions—Document referred to as "will."]—A letter, signed by deceased, but not attested, containing testamentary directions to the persons to whom it was addressed; & a paper, regularly executed by him, & attested, referring to "the exors. nominated in his will," being the same persons named in the letter, this former paper not having been produced to the witnesses, nor annexed to the latter, though both were found together sealed up in deceased's repositories, admitted as the will & codicil of deceased.—In the Goods of HALLY (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 520.

692. Reference to will revoked by second will—Probate of three documents.]—A feme coverte, having a power of appointment by settlement at her marriage, on the death of her husband, makes her will; then marries again without settlement, & afterwards executes a paper annulling former wills, & subsequently another paper, which refers to her will executed before her second marriage, & states that great part of her money must go as therein directed; administration decreed with the three papers annexed, as together containing the will.—In the Goods of MONTAGU (LADY) (1849), 7 Notes of Cases, 292.

693. Reference to list "to be signed"—List not signed.]—A list of articles was intended to be disposed of by testatrix, & was described by her as one she intended to sign. She, not having done so, the list was excluded from the probate.

How can I say that this list or book formed part of the will of deceased? She refers in her will to a list "to be signed by her." Her signature does not appear thereto. There is nothing to identify this paper so as to render it entitled to be incorporated into the will. I must therefore reject the motion (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—In the Goods of MEGAREY (1850), 15 L. 694. Reference to unexecuted deed of appointment—Document inclosed with will.]—An appointment made under a power not duly executed was held to be incorporated into a will by a reference to it, the appointment having been found inclosed in a packet together with the will.

The will refers to an appointment. That appointment is not duly executed, & is therefore not operative per se. . . . The will is all in the handwriting of deceased. & contains the words "referring to the provision of my daughter," I give so & so; & again, with the same reference, I give so & so. Here is a distinct reference to another paper. & the first, the will, would be incomplete without the second. It is therefore incorporated into the will. The two papers were found inclosed together, & were no doubt intended by the testator to operate jointly as his will. Probate of both papers should pass, as forming the will of deceased (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—In the Goods of BOSANQUET (1850), 16 L. T. O. S. 6; 14 Jur. 964.

697. Reference to list of goods in possession of beneficiary.]—In 1856 G. made & executed his will. In it was the following bequest—" I give to S. F. some household furniture, which she have got a list of." When the will was executed no such list was attached to it nor did it appear that any was produced. S. F. deposed that on deceased's making a previous will, in 1852, he told her that it was his intention to leave her some portion of his furniture, & that he had made a list thereof, which he desired she would keep ; that he then handed her a list, which remained in her possession till he made his will, in 1856, when he desired her to keep it ; that deceased never gave her any other list. The list referred to by S. F. commenced thus : " List goods I give to my godson J. E. F.," & then specified divers articles of household furniture, & also some kitchen utensils, cutlery, crockery, plate, books, a watch, pictures, & musical instruments. J. E. F. was the son of S. F. On motion for a grant of administration, the ct. held, the list of household furniture produced was not incorporated in the will, its identity with that mentioned in the will not being sufficiently proved, & rejected the motion.—In the Goods of GREVES (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 250 ; 28 L. 698. Reference in codicil to " last will "—Will informally executed—No other will found.]—Where there is a reference in a duly executed testamentary instrument to another testamentary instrument, imperfectly executed, but by such terms as to make it capable of identification, it is necessarily a subject for the admission of parol evidence, & such parol evidence is not excluded by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26).

If the parol evidence satisfactorily prove that, in the existing circumstances, there is no doubt as to the instrument referred to, it is no answer, that by possibility, circumstances might have existed in which the instrument could not have been identified.

A married woman, having power under a settlement to make a will, in the year 1851 made a testamentary instrument, in her own handwriting, which she intended to operate as a will, but which was not attested according to the requirements of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9. In 1856, she duly executed a codicil, which was headed " This is a codicil to my last will & testament." This codicil contained no reference to the testamentary paper of 1851, which was not produced at the time the codicil was executed, but was found at her death in a trunk in a room in deceased's residence, enclosed in a sealed envelope, on which was endorsed " Mrs. Anne Foote's Will." The codicil was found in a drawer in her bedroom. No other will or testamentary paper was found :—Held : as there was a distinct reference in the codicil to a " last will & testament," & as no other will had been found, the testamentary paper of 1851 was, by parol evidence, sufficiently identified as the " last will " referred to by the codicil of 1856 ; though informally executed, the testamentary paper of 1851 was incorporated with, & made valid by, the duly executed codicil of 1856, & probate granted to both papers as together containing the last will & codicil of testatrix.—ALLEN v. MADDOCK (1858), 11 Moo. Reference to " smaller bequests "—Papers inclosed with will—Papers containing bequests.]—M. duly executed a paper with these words on it : " It is my wish for my dear husband to administer the moneys ; the smaller bequests L. will be so kind as to attend to." She then, in the presence of the attesting witnesses, inclosed in it two papers with writing on them, & folded & sealed the first paper. After M.'s death, the envelope was found to contain two sheets of paper, containing bequests of money & other bequests in the handwriting of M., but unexecuted. When found, it appeared that the envelope had been opened & resealed ; there was no evidence that the papers found in it were those originally inclosed, or that they were in existence when the envelope was executed. No other testamentary papers were found :—Held : the duly executed paper did not refer to any written document as then existing, & if it did so, the document was not pointed out in such a manner as to enable the ct. to ascertain its identity ; the three papers were not together entitled to probate, & the duly executed paper, having by itself no testamentary character, was not entitled to probate.—VAN STRAUBENZEE v. MONCK (1862), 3 Sw. & Tr. 6 ; 1 New Rep. 68 ; 32 L. 701. Reference to revoked will & codicils—In letter executed as will.]—C. made a will on Apr. 30, 1857, in which he devised to H. a freehold house for life, & the residue of his real & personal estate to B. C., making H. & B. C. exors. In Sept. 1857, he made a codicil " to my last will of Apr. 30, 1857," by which he left H. £200 in addition to the devise in the will, & left other specific money legacies.

. 1.—Form : Sub-sect. 5, B. (b) iii. ; sub-sect. 6.]

On Feb. 13, 1858, he made another codicil referring to his will of 1857, & bequeathed a leasehold house & the furniture therein to H., & otherwise confirmed his will. On June 3, 1858, he made a will identical with that of 1857, except the substitution of F. C. for B. C. ; at the same time he re-executed the codicil of Sept. 1857, which then purported to be a codicil "to my last will, dated June 3, 1858." On C.'s death in Mar. 1862, the will of Apr. 1857, & the two codicils were found in an envelope sealed & indorsed by C., "sealed June 13, 1860, P. F. M. C." The will of 1858 was not forthcoming, though it had been in testator's possession. There was evidence tending to show that before the beginning of 1860 deceased intended to exclude F. C. & reinstate B. C., & that he had destroyed the will of 1858. In June, 1860, deceased wrote a letter to H. confirming what he had already done by will for her, which letter was signed by him & attested. 704. Reference to written directions—Directions subsequently executed as will—Second will revoking previous wills—Clause referring to written directions.]—A. executed, in 1866, a will which referred to written directions, which he intended to form part of the will. This paper, which began, "To my exors., I have written the following directions for your guidance with respect to many things & goods not mentioned in my will, which said will very probably will be found at W. W.'s, Esq., solr.," was further subsequently executed by him according to the provisions of Wills Act. In 1868 he executed a second will, which revoked all previous wills, & contained the following clause : "All my books, pictures, sketches, guns, rods, goods & chattels in & about the rooms I shall occupy at the time of my decease, I wish my exors. to dispose of faithfully & conscientiously according to the written directions left by me, & affixed to this my will, trusting, as I unhesitatingly do, in their honour & integrity." Nothing was affixed to the will, which remained in the possession of W., the solr. who prepared it, & the only paper of written directions forthcoming was that which testator intended to form part of the will of 1866 :—Held : it was not incorporated by the reference in the will of 1868, & as an executed testamentary paper it was revoked by such will.—In the Goods of GILL (1869), L. R. 2 P. & D. 6 ; 39 L. J. P. & M. 5 ; 21 L. T. 399 ; 34 J. P. 7.

705. Reference in codicil to copy of will—Copy produced at execution of codicil.]—Deceased executed a will in India, which was deposited in a bank in that country. Subsequently, in this country he executed a codicil to his will which contained the following clause : "Of which will I, along with this codicil thereto, execute a copy, & homologate & confirm same in all particulars, except in so far as altered or revoked by this codicil." At the time of the execution of the codicil deceased produced a paper, which he informed the witnesses was a copy of his will :—Held : the copy will so produced was incorporated in the codicil.—In the Goods of MERCER (1870), L. R. 2 P. & D. 91 ; 39 L. J. P. & M. 43 ; 23 L. T. 195 ; 34 J. P. 551 ; 18 W. R. 1040.

706. Reference to testamentary papers as "deeds."]—Testatrix in her last will recited that she had disposed of certain property in two "deeds," & confirmed them. There were no such deeds in existence, but two testamentary papers were found, corresponding in date and substance to the description given of them :—Held : the ct. held they were sufficiently identified, & incorporated them in the probate.—In the Goods of HASTINGS (1872), 26 L. T. 715 ; 36 J. P. 614 ; 20 W. R. 616.

707. Reference to book entries.]—Testator by his will dated Nov. 22, 1872, declared for the information of his trustees that the amount or values expressed in his ledger & entered on the 21st page thereof & signed by him & dated Nov. 8, 1872, were, & were the only, advancements either by way of gift or loan made by him to any of his children before Nov. 8, 1872. The 21st page of the ledger was not admitted to probate. The sums entered therein were not in all instances the true amounts actually received by the children :—Held : the will must be read as if the entries in the ledger were incorporated into it, & the entries were conclusive for the purposes of the will.—QUIHAMPTON v. GOING (1876), 24 W. 708. ——.]—Testator, who died in 1915, by his will made in 1909, & a codicil made in 1913, settled his residuary estate, subject to his wife's interest therein, upon trusts in equal thirds for his three children who survived him. By the codicil he directed that all sums of money appearing in his books of account to have been advanced by him to his son should be brought into hotchpot. There were no entries of advances in the books at the date of the will, but there were such entries between the dates of the will & of the codicil, & also after the date of the codicil. The son disputed the accuracy of the entries in the books :—Held : entries of advances made in the account books before the date of the codicil were incorporated in the will, but that entries made after that date were not receivable either as part of the will or as

Reference to documents in possession at death.]—Testatrix directed her trustees to pay all legacies which she might leave by any separate writing, letter, or jotting, under her hand, found in her custody or possession at her death. On her death there was found in her bedroom a small box con-

709. Reference in codicil to copy of will—Inconvenience of producing original will.]—Declarations of deceased person, who has been in possession of property claiming a limited interest therein under a particular will, are admissible to prove the fact that such will had a legal existence, & also that certain persons were named exors. therein. & where a copy of such will, the original not being forthcoming, is found in the possession or amongst the papers of the legal adviser of one of such exors., it is evidence of the contents of such will, & may be admitted as such.—SLY v. SLY (1877), 2 P. 710. Reference to provision in previous will—In revoking will—Confusion between will & deed.]—Testatrix executed three wills, one in 1873, another in 1877, & a third in 1881. By the will of 1873 she bequeathed the residue of a certain fund over which she had a power of appointment among her two daughters, in whose favour she had already appointed certain other moneys by deed. The will of 1877 affected a portion only of the will of 1873. By the will of 1881 she revoked all previous wills, & appointed deft. in the present action her sole residuary legatee. The will of 1881 also contained the following passage: "& whereas I have also settled one undivided moiety of the residue of the third part of £100,000, to which I am entitled under the will of my brother in favour of my daughter E. J. P." This fund had actually been dealt with by the will of 1873 only. The judge held that there was not a sufficient reference to the will of 1873 to incorporate it, deeming that the mind of testatrix was confused between the fund she had bequeathed by will & the fund she had appointed by deed.—PATON v. ORMEROD, [1892] P. 247; 61 L. J. P. 120; 66 L. T. 381.

711. Reference to inclosed numbered papers—Recital that papers signed in presence of witnesses—Denial of witnesses.]—Testator executed a document in the presence of two witnesses, who duly attested it. The document appointed no exors. & contained no bequest, but referred to "the inclosed papers, numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, & 6," as containing his testamentary wishes, & recited that those papers had been signed by himself in the presence of the witnesses, who, however, stated positively that they had never seen any of them. They deposed that deceased called them into his study, told them he had made certain alterations in his will, & asked them to witness his signature; at the same time pointing to a drawer in the table at which he was sitting, saying, "The will is in this drawer." Papers 1 to 6 bore various dates antecedent to the attested document. All the papers were holograph, & the attestation clause of the attested document referred to deceased as the "testator." All the parties interested having consented to the case being disposed of on motion: —Held: as the documents 1 to 6 were not clearly identified with the description given of them in the attested paper, so as to exclude the possibility of mistake, they could not be taken to be incorporated with such paper, & as the attested paper without the others would be inoperative, probate of all the documents must be refused.—In the Goods of GARNETT, [1894] P. 90; 63 L. 723. —— One will unexecuted.]—Testatrix left two testamentary documents, of which only one was duly executed. The first or unexecuted document made various specific bequests, & appointed an exor. The second, which was duly executed, bequeathed all the property of testatrix to her nephew, "for the purposes I require him to do absolutely":—Held: the two documents could not be admitted to probate as together constituting the will of deceased, but probate might be granted of the second or executed document, with directions to the exor. to administer the estate in conformity with the trusts of the first document.—In the Goods of MARCHANT, [1893] P. 254; 62 L. 724. —— Will constituted by aggregate.]—Testatrix, by will made before Dec. 31, 1857, bequeathed pecuniary & specific legacies, & gave her residuary estate to trustees in trust for conversion, & to hold the fund in trust for Mrs. W. for life, & after her death for her children. She declared that the "several pecuniary legacies" bequeathed to such persons as should be married women should be for their separate use. After Dec. 31, 1857, she made a codicil to her will by which she made a considerable increase in the amount of her pecuniary legacies, but did not otherwise affect the residuary estate. She died in 1866. In 1868 one of the daughters of Mrs. W., with the concurrence of her husband, by deed duly acknowledged, assigned her reversionary share in the residuary estate to a purchaser, treating herself as empowered by Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857 (c. 57), s. 1, to assign her interest:—Held: the assignor did not become "entitled under an instrument made after Dec. 31, 1857," for she derived title under the will which was made before that date, & the will & codicil could not for this purpose be treated as together forming one instrument which was not "made" until the codicil was executed.—Re ELCOM, LAYBORN v. GROVER WRIGHT, [1894] 1 Ch. 303; 63 L. 725. —— ——.]—By two testamentary instruments, called respectively a British will & an Australian will, testator domiciled in Scotland made a complete disposal of his estates, British & Australian, directing that the British will should be construed & administered according to the law of Scotland, the Australian will according to the law of New South Wales. His widow, on his death without issue, obtained a decree of the Ct. of Sess. in Scotland establishing her legal right in name of jus relictæ & terce, with consequential relief, the ct. declining jurisdiction as against the Australian trustees. Under a summons issued in the Supreme Ct. of New South Wales by resp. trustees of the Australian will, the widow claimed the beneficial dispositions in her favour contained therein; the ct. decided in her favour, & an appeal therefrom was instituted by applt., party thereto, who took beneficially under the Scottish will, but not under the Australian:—Held: the two instruments formed one will containing a coherent scheme of intention, & the widow, having elected to defeat the will in part, could not claim under it, & accordingly took no interest under the Australian will.—DOUGLAS-MENZIES v. UMPHELBY, [1908] A. 726. —— Clause introduced per incuriam in second will—Omitted from probate.]—Testator executed a will drawn by a lawyer, disposing of his real estate, but leaving some personal property undisposed of. He expressed an intention of disposing of the latter by a future instrument. Subsequently he bought a printed form, & without legal advice, disposed of his personal property, inserting a clause revoking all former dispositions: Held: the second document was intended to be supplemental to the prior one, the revocatory clause did not represent testator's wishes, & both documents would be admitted to probate, the revocatory clause in the second being omitted.—MARKLEW v. TURNER (1900), 17 T. 727. No evidence of priority of execution-Complete inconsistency—Neither document admitted.]—Primâ facie every testamentary document duly executed in accordance with the provisions of Wills Act ought to be admitted to probate. But if there are two testamentary documents of the same date, & it cannot be ascertained which of them was executed first, & their provisions are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together, the presumption in favour of admissibility will be rebutted, & neither document will be admitted to probate.

But when the provisions of two testamentary documents, the priority of which is uncertain & in neither of which there are express words of revocation, are apparently inconsistent, the ct. will endeavour so to construe the words that if possible the two documents may stand together, & may both be admitted to probate as expressing together the whole testamentary intention of the testator.

Testatrix executed two codicils, both dated the same day, their provisions being to some extent inconsistent. The evidence of an attesting witness proved, in the opinion of the Ct. of Appeal, that the two codicils were executed on the same occasion & practically simultaneously. There was nothing to show which was in fact executed first. The judge refused to admit either codicil to probate, on the ground that an introductory clause in each showed that it was intended to operate only in the event of testatrix surviving her husband, whereas she died before him:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the introductory clause, the codicils were not contingent or conditional, but were intended to operate in any event; (2) the provisions of the two codicils were not so inconsistent that they could not stand together, & both ought to be admitted to probate.—TOWNSEND v. MOORE, [1905] P. 66; 71 L. 729. —— Intention ascertained from disposition of property.]—In the absence of express words of revocation in a later testamentary paper, the admissibility to probate along with it of an earlier paper is a matter of intention to be sought from the dispositions of property made by testator.

The question which paper or what number of papers testator desired or expected to be admitted to probate is not the true test.

Testator duly executed a formal will disposing of his entire estate & appointing exors. At a later date, on a printed form commencing with the words, "This is the last & only will," he purported to deal only with certain policy moneys & appointed an exor.:—Held: the words "last & only" effected no revocation of the earlier will.—SIMPSON v. FOXON, [1907] P. 54; 76 L. J. P. 7; 96 L. T. 473; 23 T. L. R. 150.

730. —— Pencil notes on epitome of will—Pencil notes made abroad.]—Testator, while in Scotland shortly before his death, had made some pencil notes on an epitome of his will, dated June 12, 1914, by which he gave his estates in Perthshire to a nephew instead of to a brother. These pencil notes were valid testamentary dispositions according to the law of Scotland:—Held: the notes were valid holograph testamentary documents, & should be admitted to probate, together with the will of June 12, 1914.—In the Estate of FOSTER, FOSTER v. FOSTER (1922), 67 Sol. Jo. 199.

On her death, two days subsequently, the envelope, still sealed with the same seal, was found on her table directed to J. A., her nephew; on being opened, it was found to contain a testamentary disposition in the form of a letter addressed to her nephew. The ct. admitted parol evidence of the identity of the inclosure so found after death with the document referred to by the executed memorandum, & granted probate of the envelope & contents to J. A., as exor., according to the tenor.—In the Goods of ALMOSNINO (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 508; 29 L. J. P. & M. 46; 2 L. T. 191; 23 J. P. 328; 6 Jur. N. S. 302; 164 E. R. 835.

732. –.]—An Englishman who had acquired a domicil in Chile executed a closed or secret will according to the provisions of the Chilean Civil Code before a notary public & five witnesses. By that code a closed will was deemed to include the cover which contained it, & that cover was the only document on which the names of testator, the five witnesses, & the notary were signed together, the will itself being signed by testator alone. This closed will, with the cover thus indorsed, was proved or registered in Chile, & letters of administration with the will, including the cover, annexed, were granted to pltf. in England, where testator possessed real property:—Held: the indorsement on the envelope & the document therein inclosed constituted one testamentary disposition, & testator had executed a will capable of passing his real estate in England.—Re NICHOLLS, HUNTER v. NICHOLLS, [1921] 2 Ch. 11; 90 L. 733. Inconsistent wills of same date—One executed by mistake—Different sides of same paper.]—Testatrix duly executed two inconsistent wills, bearing the same date, & written on different sides of the same sheet of paper. The ct. granted probate of the paper signed by testatrix, with the intention that it should operate as her will, & not of the other paper.—In the Goods of NOSWORTHY (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 44; 34 L. J. 734. Admissibility of parol evidence—What documents constitute will.]—Testator executed three testamentary papers on the same day, one of them purporting to dispose of certain property in Canada only, & two of them purporting to dispose of certain property in England, & of the residue. Parol evidence being admitted to ascertain the order in which they were executed, & to explain their ambiguity, it appeared that testator intended the two which purported to dispose of the residue to apply only to the residue in England. Probate was granted of the three papers as together containing the last will & testament of deceased.—In the Goods of NICKALLS (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 40; 34 L. J. P. M. & A. 103; 29 J. P. 455; 13 W. 739. Method of writing—In pencil—Making of will.]—Probate of a codicil written in pencil, & which had been in possession of the exor. upwards of three years, called in & revoked.

It has been objected that it is written in pencil; to this it has been replied that deceased had a right to write his will with a pencil or to write his will & three codicils in ink & a fourth in pencil, & so he has undoubtedly, & it would be valid in law provided that the ct. could be satisfied that he intended so to do. . . . But when the question to be decided is the previous one, whether he did intend this paper as the final declaration of his mind & as a codicil, or whether it was merely preparatory to a more final disposition the material with which it is written becomes a most important circumstance, & the importance of it is still further increased when the ct. sees that deceased made other codicils all formally written in ink, one before this paper, others possibly after it (SIR J. NICHOLL).—RYMES v. CLARKSON (1809), 1 Phillim. 22; 161 E. R. 901.

740. —— —— ——.]—Where a will seemed to have been first written iu pencil & afterwards traced with ink, but not completely, words in some cases being written in ink above, & apparently in substitution for, the pencil writing, & in other parts the pencil writing standing alone, the ct. declined to include the pencil writing in the grant of probate of the will.—In the Goods of BELLAMY (1866), 14 W. R. 501.

741. —— —— ——.]—Deceased executed a printed form of a will. The blanks were filled up by deceased in her own handwriting, partly with ink & partly with a pencil. Some portion of the writing in ink extended over that in pencil, & some words of the latter had been rubbed out & obliterated. The words in ink were sensible as read with the printed part of the will. The attesting witnesses did not see the writing when they attested the will:—Held: the words in pencil were deliberative only, & probate was granted without them.—In the Goods of ADAMS (1872), L. 743. —— —— ——.]—Testator executed a will & codicil. At some time after the execution of the will, but before that of the codicil, he, with a pencil, struck through several paragraphs of his will, & made his initials on the margin; he also placed a query opposite other paragraphs. The codicil confirmed, in so far as it did not alter, the will:—Held: the alterations so made were only deliberative, & not final, & not included in the confirmation of the codicil, &, therefore, to be omitted from the probate.—In the Goods of HALL (1871), L. 744. —— —— ——.]—Testator duly executed his will in 1875, giving an annuity to his widow charged upon certain property over which he had a power of appointment & subject thereto to his daughters. The will remained in the custody of his solrs., & down to the time of his death, testator frequently expressed his regret that he was not in a position to benefit his widow more largely. In 1888 he executed a second document in form of a will which he inclosed in a sealed envelope with instructions that it was to be opened at the same time as his will. By it he left to a Mrs. B. certain house property which he had purchased out of his savings. No exors. were therein appointed, & the printed revocation clause was struck through with a pencil:—Held: both documents were entitled to probate & the second of them should not include the revocatory words.—In the Goods of TONGE (1891), 66 L. 776. —— Stamping with testator's name.]—Testator, towards the end of his life, had his usual signature engraved, so that it might be stamped on letters & other documents requiring his signature. He made two codicils, each of which was so stamped with his name by another person in his presence & by his direction:—Held: a due execution of the codicils under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26).—JENKINS v. GAISFORD & THRING, In the Goods of JENKINS (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 93; 2 New Rep. 401; 32 L. T. 643.

778. —— —— Subsequent confirmation.]—Testator at the time of the execution of his will was in such a weak state as to be unable to affix his signature & it was signed for him by the person who drew it. The ct., on affidavits that testator had frequently afterwards confirmed the will, & that the next of kin did not object, granted probate of the will.—In the Goods of ELCOCK (1869), 20 L. 779. —— —— Testator unable to remember instructions for will.]—If a person who has instructed a solr. to prepare his will accepts a will which is put before him as a carrying out of such instructions, & consents to his signature being appended to the will by another person, the will is valid, although testator may then be unable to remember the instructions which he had previously given.

Testatrix, being in failing health, had several interviews with her solr., & instructed him to prepare her will. A few weeks afterwards, a will prepared by the solr.'s partner from the instructions given by testatrix was brought to her for execution. She was then in a comatose condition, but was able, when roused, to speak or make signs in answer to questions. One of her medical attendants held the will before her, saying, "This is your will," & asked her whether she wished F. to sign it for her. Testatrix was heard to say "yes," & the will was then signed in her name by F., & was duly attested. The jury found that testatrix, when the will was executed, did not remember & understand the instructions which she had given to her solr.; that she could not, if it had been thought advisible to rouse her, have understood each clause of the will; that she was capable of understanding, & did understand, that she was executing a will for which she had given instructions:—Held: the will was valid & was entitled to probate.—PARKER v. FELGATE (1883), 8 P. F. B. by C. C. in the presence of," etc.:—Held: this was a sufficient signing within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26).—In the Goods of BLAIR (1848), 6 Notes of Cases, 528.

789. Signature on lower part of edge of paper.]—When the dispositive part of a codicil, written on a half sheet of note paper, occupied nearly the whole paper, & the names of the attesting witnesses were subscribed at the bottom of the page, & the signature of testator was written down the lower part of the edge of the paper, the ct. held it to be a valid execution within Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852 (c. 24).—In the Goods of JONES (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 1; 34 L. attesting witness appeared above that of testator himself. The handwriting of testator & of one witness to the will was proved by oral evidence & by comparison of samples of handwriting; but the only sample of writing of the other witness, apart from his signature on the will, was a signature in the register of his own marriage in the year 1822. Evidence was given to show that every possible effort had been made to prove the handwriting of this witness, & evidence was also given to show that the person who purported to have signed the will as a witness was the same who was married in 1822, & who purported to have signed the marriage register in that year. Evidence was also given to show that the two witnesses & testator had lived together in the same institution at the date of the will, & that testator had stated that the document in question was his will, & that the two persons, whose names appeared upon it, had witnessed it:—Held: the will was entitled to probate, as there was sufficient to support the presumption of law omnia rite esse acta, & the position of the signatures was covered by Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852 (c. 24).—BYLES v. Cox (1896), 74 L. 800. Mark in middle.]—Testator two days before his death, being paralysed on one side & partly speechless, intimated to the two medical men in attendance on him his desire to make a will. They interpreted his wishes by signs & wrote them down on a card. He executed the document by making his mark, which, however, appeared in the middle of the writing, & they then put their initials as witnesses at the back. Subsequently, after a conversation with one of testator's relatives, they returned to his room, & telling him that they had taken on themselves more responsibility than they ought to have taken, & that what they had written must be regarded as a memorandum, they erased their initials at the back. Testator seemed to acquiesce in this, but the card was found after his death in a handbag which he kept near his bed, & there was evidence that he had shown it to the lady whom he intended it to benefit, telling her it was for her, & wished her to take it:—Held: the card constituted a valid testamentary paper duly witnessed, expressing the intentions of deceased, & what passed at the erasure of the witnesses' initials did not amount to a revocation; but it was not signed at the "foot or end" within the meaning of the statute, & was therefore not duly executed & not entitled to probate.—MARGARY v. ROBINSON (1886), 12 P. 803. Necessity for signature on each sheet.]—A will, provisionally made, propounded as contained in three sheets of paper unattached, of an informal nature, signed at the foot of the last sheet only, attested by witnesses who could not depose affirmatively that testator's signature was upon the paper at the time, the case being also bare of information, & the disposition at direct variance with a will regularly executed ten days before, pronounced for upon evidence of the handwriting of testator; of his delivering the papers as his will, & of their plight & condition. The ct. does not require direct affirmative evidence of due execution, but, where the attesting witnesses differ, or their recollection fails, will judge itself from all the circumstances.

It is not necessary . . . that all the papers of which a will consists should be signed by the deceased or connected together (SIR JENNER FUST).—GREGORY v. QUEEN'S PROCTOR (1846), 4 Notes of Cases, 620; 7 L. T. O. S. 470.

Signature on last sheet—Expressed to be signed on each sheet.]—(1) Where a will, which was written on three sides of one sheet of paper & duly attested by three witnesses, concluded by stating "that testator had signed his name to the two first sides thereof, & his hand & seal to the last," & it appeared that he had put his name & seal to the last only, but had omitted to sign his name to the two first sides:—Held: the will was well executed, as, whatever might have been testator's former intention, it was abandoned by the final signature made by him at the time of executing the will.

The signatures on the first sheets were intended merely to guard against other sheets being interpolated; testator's signature at the end of the paper is that which the ct. must consider as intended to give validity to the whole instrument, & consequently that is the signature which ought to have been attested (SIR JOHN DODSON).—EWEN v. FRANKLIN (1855), Dea. & Sw. 7; 26 L. 807. —— Sheets joined together—All sheets presumed to form part of will.]—When several sheets of paper, constituting a connected but not in all points a consistent disposal of the property are found together, the last sheet being duly executed, the presumption, in the absence of direct proofs, is, that they all formed the will of deceased at the time of execution. A general revocatory clause of "all former wills" leads to the inference that the deceased at that time intended to leave a subsisting will.—MARSH v. MARSH (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 528; 30 L. J. P. M. & A. 77; 1 L. T. 523; 24 J. P. 311; 6 Jur. N. S. 380; 164 E. R. 845.

808. —— —— ——.]—The will of deceased had been ingrossed by a law stationer on fifteen brief sheets of paper, consecutively numbered. On the sixteenth sheet testator had written a codicil, & on the eighteenth & last a schedule of property, referred to in the will. On the death of testator, it was found that the original fourth sheet had been removed & placed loose in his desk, & that the original seventeenth sheet had been used by testator in substitution of the fourth. The several sheets were tied together with tape:—Held: the legal presumption that papers bound together & constituting the will, as found at testator's death, were so bound together at the time of execution & attestation was not rebutted by the circumstances of the case.—REES v. REES (1873), L. R. 3 P. & D. 84; 29 L. T. 375; 37 J. P. 760.

809. Signature on all sheets but last.]—Deceased executed a paper, intended to be his will, by signing his name at the foot of the first five sheets, but inadvertently omitted to do so on the sixth sheet at the end of the will. The witnesses signed the five sheets, & also the sixth, below a full attestation clause. A sentence, which commenced at the end of the fifth sheet, was concluded on the top of the sixth, but no bequest was actually written on the sixth sheet:—Held: the execution was invalid, even to pass the first five sheets.—SWEETLAND v. SWEETLAND (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 6; 34 L. There being no evidence of what occurred when the signatures were made:—Held: the ct. could not presume that when the witnesses attested deceased's signature on the slip of paper, the sheet of paper was produced by deceased with the intention of giving effect to it as his will.—In the Goods of M'KEY (1876), 11 I. b. ——.]—A holograph will was written on an undivided double sheet of foolscap of which the second page was left blank, & the third contained two lines completing a sentence continued from the first page & adding another. Attached by wafers.]—Deceased's will was written on a half sheet of paper, filling the first side & a portion of the second. At the end of the will a piece of paper was affixed by wafers upon that on which the will was written ; after the paper was so affixed, deceased made his mark & attached his seal, & the witnesses signed their names on such separate paper :—Held : as testator clearly intended, by making his mark where he did, to give effect to the writing above it, the will was properly executed.—COOK v. LAMBERT (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 46 ; 32 L. 812. —— —— No evidence whether attached before execution.]—After the death of A. there was found a will in her handwriting, which filled the four sides of a sheet of paper. To the bottom of the second side was attached by wafers a piece of paper, upon which was written a formal clause of attestation, & the signatures of deceased & of two witnesses. One of the witnesses was dead, & the other proved that the paper was duly signed & attested ; but was unable to say whether before execution it was attached to the will. 813. —— Attached by string.]—Deceased signed his name & the witnesses attested such signature on a piece of paper upon which no dispositive part of the will was written. This paper was attached by string to the paper on which the will was written just opposite to the termination of the writing. On the evidence of the witnesses that the papers, to the best of their belief, were in the same state when they signed them as they are now :—Held : the execution was valid.—In the Goods of HORSFORD (1871), L. 826. Dispositive provision overleaf—List of devises & bequests.]—An unexecuted paper writing is not entitled to probate as incorporated, unless it be so described as to leave no doubt in the mind of the ct., on the circumstances proved, that it is the paper writing referred to.

Testator executed a will on the first side of a sheet of paper, leaving his property after his wife's death to be divided in manner hereinafter named, amongst his nine children. On the second & third sides of the sheet there was a list of absolute devises & bequests to his children, not signed by testator. The writer of the will & of the list deposed that the list was written by him at the dictation of deceased, & read over to him before the execution of the will, but the attesting witnesses only saw the first side :—Held : the intrinsic & parol evidence before the ct. was not sufficient to justify it in granting probate of this list on motion.—In the Goods of BREWIS (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 473 ; 4 New Rep. 120 ; 33 L. 829. —— Two letters of signature extending overleaf.]—Testator wrote a will on three side of a sheet of note paper. The attestation clause & names of the attesting witnesses were at the bottom of the second side ; a dispositive clause was written on the third side, & all the letters of testator's signature, excepting the two last, which extended over to the third side, were on the second side :—Held : to be a good execution.—In the Goods of POWELL (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 34 ; 34 L. The form was not filled up except as to the appointment of exors. 831. ·.]—A testamentary document consisted of a sheet of paper containing on the first page a lithographed form of will. The form in the first page was filled in by testatrix & contained bequests to "my sisters & friends." Her signature & those of the attesting witnesses were at the bottom of the first page. The second & third pages contained a list of bequests to persons, some of whom were the sisters & others friends of testatrix. There was no direct evidence that the second & third pages had been written before the execution of the will:—Held: assuming the second & third pages to have been written before the execution of the will, the signature of testatrix was not so placed "opposite to" the writing contained in these pages as to bring the case within Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852 (c. 24), s. 1, & therefore the first page alone could be admitted to probate.—ROYLE v. HARRIS, [1895] P. 163; 64 L. The ct. granted probate of the first two pages.—In the Goods of WRAY (1883), 47 J. P. 279; 31 W. R. 476.

833. —— Alterations added overleaf.]—Testator duly executed a will prepared by a solr. which was written on the first side of a sheet of foolscap paper. Desiring shortly before his death to make an alteration in the disposition of his property he called in the assistance of a neighbour, who wrote out a codicil on the third sheet of the foolscap, beginning, "The following alterations having been first made," & ending with an attestation clause in due form. The mark of testator, however, & the signatures of the attesting witnesses, were written opposite the body of the will on the margin of the first page, the person who prepared the codicil being under the impression that as it was an alteration in the will it ought to be attested on the margin:—Held: the codicil was not duly executed, & probate refused.—In the Goods of HUGHES (1887), 12 P. D. 107; 56 L. J. P. 71; 57 L. T. 495; 35 W. R. 568.

834. —— Will on three pages—Signed & attested on first.]—A will, which was written on three pages of paper, was signed by testatrix & by the attesting witnesses on the first page only:—Held: the first page of the will ought to be admitted to probate.—MILLWARD v. BUSWELL (1904), 20 T. L. R. 714.

835. Signature constructively at end of will—General rule.]—Where, from the obvious sequence & sense of the context, it appears to the satisfaction of the ct. that the signature of deceased really follows the dispositive part of a testamentary instrument, though it may occupy a place on the paper literally above the dispositive parts or part thereof, such testamentary instrument will be entitled to probate.—In the Goods of KIMPTON (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 427; 3 New Rep. 691; 33 L. After the incomplete sentence was an asterisk, & the words "see over." The will, which covered the whole of the first side, was executed at the bottom of that side, & at the top of the second side was another asterisk, & a devise of the cottages to his daughter. There was an asterisk before these words & an asterisk before the word "executor" wherever it occurred in the will. It was proved that these words were written before the execution of the will. After the execution, testator directed the name of C. S., who was an attesting witness as well as exor., to be erased & the name of W. S. to be written over the erasure. The will was not re-executed after these alterations had been made:—Held: the nomination of exors. might be included in the probate, but the name of C. When found after the death of deceased, beneath the last line were the words—"Witness, J. S. Witness, H. E. Apr. 11, 1838." The will was propounded as executed on Apr. 11, 1838. It was proved that the witnesses J. S. & H. E. were dead, & that their signatures were genuine:—Held: from the construction of the last sentence testator intended his name at the end of the will to represent his signature, & due execution & attestation must be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.—TROTT v. SKIDMORE (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr. 12; 2 L. SUB-SECT. 6.—SIGNATURE IN PRESENCE OF WITNESSES.

A. In General.

See Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9.

850. General rule—Signature must be seen by witnesses.]—Two persons subscribed a paper, in the presence of S. L., & of each other, S. L. having previously, in their joint presence, acknowledged the said paper to be his will. The witnesses did not see S. L. sign his name to the paper, nor did they, at the time of subscribing their names to it, see his signature, the writing upon the paper being purposely concealed from them. Upon the death of S. L., his signature was found at the end of the paper:—Held: this was not a valid will, within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9.

If the witnesses are to be cognisant of the making of the signature, when the execution is in that form, must they not see & be cognisant of the signature when the will is to be executed in the alternative form, by acknowledging the signature? The alternative form of execution by acknowledgment, is to answer the same purpose, it is to be equivalent in effect to actual signing; & ought not the acknowledged signature to be proved by the same mode of evidence, namely, by the subscribing witnesses?

What is the plain meaning of acknowledging a signature in the presence of witnesses? what do the words import but this? "Here is my name written, I acknowledge that name so written to have been written by me; bear witness" how is it possible that the witnesses should swear that any signature was acknowledged unless they saw it? (SIR H. JENNER FUST).

"To attest" is to bear witness to a fact (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—HUDSON v. PARKER (1844), 1 Rob. Eccl. 14; 3 Notes of Cases, 236; 8 Jur. 786; 163 E. R. 948.

852. Testator seen to be writing — Whether sufficient.]—If testator signs his will in the presence of the attesting witnesses who see him in the act of writing, & they then attest, the attestation is good, although they do not see the signature, & he does not acknowledge it. The attesting witnesses to a will saw testatrix writing something on the will before they signed, but they did not see what she wrote, & they did not know that it was a will. When they subscribed their names they did not see the attestation clause, which contained testatrix's signature, or any of the writing on the will, as testatrix concealed it from them by holding a piece of blotting-paper over it. There was a full attestation clause in testatrix's handwriting:—Held: as the witnesses had seen testatrix write what the ct. presumed to be her signature, although they did not see the signature, & she did not acknowledge it to them, the attestation was sufficient.—SMITH v. SMITH (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 143; 35 L. J. P. & M. 65; 14 L. T. 417; 12 Jur. N. S. 674; 14 W. R. 618.

853. Must be made or acknowledged in presence of witnesses.]—A codicil was signed by deceased, who was ill in bed in one room, & attested by two witnesses in an opposite room, but who did not see deceased make or acknowledge her signature, or have any conversation with her respecting it. Deceased, the doors of both the rooms being open, might by raising herself in bed have seen the witnesses sign; but there was no evidence that she did do so:—Held: a bad execution, on the ground that deceased did not make or acknowledge her signature in the presence of the witnesses, & that they did not attest in her presence.—In the Goods of KILLICK (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 578; 10 Jur. 854. —— Actual visual presence.]—The expression "in the presence" in Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9, must be taken to mean actual visual presence.

Where testatrix signed her will in a shop, & one witness, who saw her sign, attested it, but the other witness, being at the time when testatrix & first witness signed engaged at the other side of the shop with a person who stood between him & testatrix, did not see them sign & did not know nor have the opportunity of knowing anything about what they had been engaged upon until after they had signed, when he was asked to be a witness:—Held: testatrix to be a witness:—Held: testatrix did not sign "in the presence" of the second witness.—BROWN v. SKIRROW, [1902] P. 3; 71 L. the same time, "to sign a paper for him," which they did in his presence; the paper was so folded that the witnesses did not see any writing whatever on it; A. B. did not state what was the nature of the paper in question. On the death of A. B. it was found to be his intended will:—Held: it was not entitled to probate, the provisions of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9, not having been complied with.

It is said that the ct. may presume that the paper was signed while the witnesses were in the room; but the ct. cannot presume this, while the impression on the minds of the witnesses is that it was not signed in their presence. Although the circumstances of the case do not preclude the possibility of the paper having been then signed by deceased in the presence of the witnesses, the proof of the affirmative lies on those who propound the paper, & I cannot presume, in the absence of all evidence, notwithstanding I have a strong inclination to carry into effect the clear intentions of deceased, that the instrument was signed in the presence of the witnesses.

This brings me then to the second point, whether the signature was acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses. I have already stated, that, notwithstanding the form of the plea, the ct. would be inclined to give the party the benefit of any proof which may arise from the circumstances of the case. It is not contended that there was any express acknowledgment of a signature, that deceased said, "This is my signature, & I request you to attest it," the case must therefore rest on what may be considered a virtual acknowledgment of a signature, it is not necessary that testator should state to the witnesses that it is his signature; the production of a will by testator, it having his name upon it, & a request to the witnesses to attest it, would be a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature under the present statute (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—ILOTT v. GENGE (1842), 3 Curt. 160; 1 Notes of Cases, 572; 163 E. R. 689; affd. (1844), 4 Moo. P. C. C. 265. P. C.

882. General rule.]—(1) To make a valid subscription & attestation to a will there must be either the name of the witness or some mark intended to represent it. A correction of an error in a previous writing of his name, or his acknowledgment of it, or the adding of a date to it, will not be sufficient for that purpose.

(2) The signature, or acknowledgment, of testator must be made in the presence of two witnesses, present at the time, & they must, after he has so signed, or so acknowledged his signature, subscribe the will in his presence.

Testator produced his will to A., & signed it in A.'s presence. A., whose name consisted of four words, the first of which began with "F.," then, in testator's presence, signed his own name, but by accident left his first initial letter uncrossed, so that it stood as if it was "T." He afterwards advised testator that there ought to be two witnesses to the will, & in the afternoon of the same day, B. being present, testator produced his will, & showed & acknowledged his signature in the presence of both A. & B. B. then wrote his name, & at his desire A. added the date, & then observed & corrected the first initial of his own name by crossing the T., & so making it F. :—Held : the will was not duly attested within Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9.—HINDMARSH v. CHARLTON (1861), 8 H. Deceased merely asked the witnesses to sign a paper for him. Deceased did not sign it in their presence, neither did it appear that his signature was affixed thereto at the time they signed it ; so that the fact of his asking them to sign could not be construed into an act of acknowledgment of his signature previously made. The witnesses are to attest the signature of a testator either made or acknowledged in their presence. This is the will of a Welshman, written by a neighbour, a shopkeeper P., who was not acquainted with the mode of executing wills. When P. wrote the words he never intended to attest the execution of the will, but only to show that he had been the writer of the will from the dictation of the deceased. He says: "I was not aware that, in order to make a will valid, it must be attested by two witnesses; I wrote my name to the will to show that I was the writer of it; I did believe that, as I was the writer of the will, I could not become a witness to it." It is not possible for the ct. to say that this is a will signed by deceased in the presence of two witnesses, & attested & subscribed by them, as the witness P. expressly says it was not so attested (SIR H. On the trial of the ejectment by the devisees under this will, against the heir-at-law, parol evidence of the execution of the instrument was given, & the jury found that W. B. "signed at the same time as the others, as an attesting witness, & that the others signed at the same time with him," & that "all three attested the will as attesting witnesses." 969 iii. ——.]—A plea stating "that the will was executed by testator according to Wills Act, 1837, in the presence of the witnesses whose names severally appear upon the will" is bad without stating that the witnesses subscribed same in the presence of testator & of each other.—MITCHELL v. HUFFINGTON (1858), 32 L. 980. Addition to will—Unattested—Invalid.]—I cannot grant probate of the addition. The will is regularly attested in the presence of two witnesses, & in this addition testator appoints exors., & of his intention to do so there is very little doubt, & I think it is not improbable that the addition was in the will at the time it was attested; but the witnesses do not say so, & the words, "witnessed by the above persons," may have been written after the execution. It is not a part of the will; it is not in the body of the will. I am afraid I cannot, with reference to the Act of Parliament, grant probate of the addition. It is not attested by the two witnesses who attested the will, who cannot say that it was there at the time the will was executed, though it is probable that it was so, & that the deceased had signed his name to it. I presume testator thought that sufficient, & there is no probability that it was added after the execution (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—In the Goods of JONES (1842), 1 Notes of Cases, 396.

1014. General rule—Must himself subscribe.]—(1) An attesting witness must himself subscribe the will.

(2) It is not essential that a witness should sign his own name, provided it is clear that his subscription is intended as an act of attestation.

The name of A., an attesting witness to a will, was at his request subscribed by B., who was present at the execution:—Held: as A. had not subscribed, & B.'s subscription was not intended as an act of attestation, the will was not duly executed.—In the Goods of DUGGINS (1870), 39 L. J. P. & M. 24; 22 L. T. 182; 34 J. P. 265.

1015. Written on behalf of witness—Invalid.]—An attesting witness to a will being unable to write, the other attesting witness, since deceased, wrote her name for her:—Held: as both the witnesses had not "subscribed," the attestation was defective.—In the Goods of MEAD (1842), 1 Notes of Cases, 456; 6 Jur. 351.

1016. —— ——.]—Two witnesses, a man & his wife, called to attest a will; the man subscribes both his own name & his wife's:—Held: this was not a compliance with the Act.—In the Goods of WHITE (1843), 2 Notes of Cases, 461; 7 Jur. 1045.

1017. —— ——.]—Testatrix having signed her will desired M. & E. to attest, but as E. could not write, testatrix desired J., who was also present, to write the name of E., which J. did, but did not sign his own name:—Held: the paper was not entitled to probate as E. might have made his mark, & a desire that another should sign could not be construed to be a subscription by E.—In the Goods of COPE (1850), 2 Rob. 1019. Hand of witness guided—Valid.]—A will, made after Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), came into operation, was attested by one witness in his own handwriting; & he also held & guided the hand of a second witness, who could not write or read; & in this way the second witness's name was written as attesting witness. Testator had desired the two to attest:—Held: a sufficient attestion under sect. 9.—HARRISON v. ELVIN (1842), 3 Q. B. 117; 2 Gal. & Dav. 769; 11 L. J. Q. B. 197; 6 Jur. 849; 114 E. R. 451.

B. being unable to write, A., by his request, guided his hand when he subscribed the will:—Held: the subscription of B. was valid.—In the Goods of FRITH (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 8; 27 L. J. P. & M. 6; 30 L. T. O. S. 295; 4 Jur. N. S. 288; 6 W. R. 262; 164 E. R. 604.

1021. Top of pen held by witness—Writing by another—Witness able to write.]—Where the two attesting witnesses to a will, who were able to write, held the top of the pen whilst another person, the drawer of the will, wrote their names, the ct. rejected the motion for probate.—In the Goods of KILEHER (1848), 6 Notes of Cases, 15; 10 L. 1026. Use of wrong name—"John Clerk, his clerk."]—A witness inadvertently, instead of writing his name John Edmunds, under that of the other witness, a solicitor, wrote "John Clerk, his clerk":—Held: a sufficient subscription.—In the Goods of OLLIVER (1851), 2 Ecc. & Ad. 57; 164 E. R. 305.

The will appeared on the face of it to be duly executed. The ct. held, that as the attesting witness did not intend the subscription to the will to represent her own signature, the attestation was invalid, & the will could not be admitted to probate.—PRYOR v. PRYOR (1860), 29 L. 1033. Retracing signature with dry pen.]—An attesting witness to a will having on the re-execution thereof traced over his previous signature with a dry pen held not to have subscribed, but only to have acknowledged his signature, which is not sufficient under the statute. The statute requires an act to be done by the witnesses which shall be apparent on the face of the paper.—PLAYNE v. SCRIVEN (1849), 1 Rob. Eccl. 772; 7 Notes of Cases, 122; 13 L. T. O. 1036. ——.]—Some alterations having been made in a will subsequent to execution, testator & the attesting witnesses traced the former signatures with a dry pen, & the attesting witnesses wrote their initials in the margin, opposite each alteration. The ct. held, that these initials were no evidence of a due execution of the alterations, & refused to admit them to probate.—In the Goods of CUNNINGHAM (1860), 4 Sw. & Tr. 194; Sea. & Sm. 132; 29 L. The latter traced his signature over with a dry pen, & the former signed his name:—Held: the execution was invalid in the latter case by reason that the witnesses did not both attest & subscribe the signature of deceased; & in the former by reason that one witness had no intention, by writing his Christian name only, to subscribe the will.—In the Goods of MADDOCK (1874), L. P." She signed all three sheets in the presence of the witnesses, but they attested her signature to the first sheet only. There being nothing in the contents of the three papers to connect them with each other, & the first which was attested being complete in itself, the ct. refused to grant probate of the two which were unattested.—In the Goods of PEARSE (1867), L. The will was signed by testator & subscribed by the witnesses on the third page, but before its execution the witnesses saw some writing on the fourth page. The will gave legacies & annuities of considerable amount, but the debts of testator exhausted the personalty, & the only allusion to his real estate was contained in the writing on the fourth page : Held : the signature to the will which the witnesses attested, was the signature on the third page, & therefore the writing on the fourth page could not be included in the probate.—In the Goods of DEARLE (1878), 47 L. 1070. General rule—Witnessing beneficiary unable to take.]—(1) By a will made since Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), certain land & houses, after the deaths of testator's niece A. & her husband J., to whom life interests had been given, were directed "to be equally divided among the children" of A. & J. The will purported to be attested by three witnesses, two of whom were Thomas & Sarah, children of A. & J.:—Held: the devise to the children, although it was a devise to them as tenants in common, was a devise to a class, so that the whole was to be taken by those who after testator's death came within the limits of such class & were capable of taking, & therefore the shares of Sarah & Thomas, who as attesting witnesses were themselves incapable of taking, went to the other members of the class, & not to the heir-at-law of testator.

(2) Qu.: whether a person who sees testator sign the will, & who afterwards attests the will but not in testator's presence, & who therefore is not an attesting witness within the meaning of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9, is rendered by sect. 15 incapable of taking anything under the will.—FELL v. BIDDOLPH (1875), L. One of the witnesses to the execution of this paper by testatrix was the wife of Dr. Irons:—Held: as Dr. Irons was a mere trustee for Brompton Church, the bequest was not invalidated under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15, by the attestation of his wife.—CRESSWELL v. CRESSWELL (1868), L. B. gave evidence that before executing this codicil testatrix had stated to him the alterations she desired to make in her will, & that he had made a pencil memorandum of her various fresh bequests, repeating each item to her, & that, except so far as to give effect to the new wishes so stated to him, testatrix did not intend to alter her previous dispositions. The memorandum was not signed by testatrix. H., one of the joint beneficiaries of furniture mentioned in the memorandum, attested the execution of the fourth codicil:—Held: (1) the words "such as cash, furniture, etc.," did not cut down the words "all my personalty," & the fourth codicil comprised & gave to B. as trustee the entire personal estate. (2) As H. had attested the fourth codicil her beneficial interest under the parol trust failed, just as it would have done had the trust been declared in the codicil, & the whole beneficial interest in the furniture belonged to the other joint beneficiary.—Re FLEETWOOD, SIDGREAVES v. BREWER (1880), 15 Ch. One of the employees had attested testator's signature to the will, & also two codicils which confirmed the will, but did not refer to the gift to employees; another employee had attested the codicils, but not the will:—Held: the employee who had witnessed the will & codicils could not take the gift, but the witness to the codicils only was not incapacitated from taking under the will.—Re MARCUS, MARCUS v. MARCUS (1887), 56 L. Testator also directed that, inasmuch as certain parts of the proceeds of his estate might be of such a nature as not to be legally applicable to answer & satisfy bequests to charities, the assets should be marshalled, so that such of the legacies thereby bequeathed as were given to charities might be paid exclusively out of the funds legally so applicable. In the original will was a clause whereby annuitants were excluded from participation, & also representatives of legatees who might die before the period of distribution. By a codicil in the margin of the will this passage was struck through with a pen, & the cancellation attested in the ordinary testamentary form, one of the witnesses being a legatee who happened to die before the period of distribution:—Held: the representatives of the legatee who attested the cancellation, & died before the period of distribution, were excluded from participation, under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15.—GASKIN v. ROGERS (1866), L. 1092. —— Own satisfaction—No testimonium clause.]—A will was executed in 1844. It had the name of testator, his seal, the word "witness" & then the names of two persons J. T. C. & J. S. H. These names were the last marks on the third side of the sheet of paper on which the will was written. On the top of the fourth side the words "This last will & testament was signed in our presence, & in the presence of each other, by him J. T. G., J. S. H., C. B." While so serving testator was mortally wounded by a fanatic & was carried into camp, where he dictated a will to his brother-in-law, whom he made his residuary legatee, & died on the next day. The will was signed by testator & attested by his brother-in-law & another officer as witnesses. His estate consisted of personal property only:—Held: (1) testator was in "actual military service" within the meaning of s. 11 of the Wills Act, 1837, at the time when he made his will; (2) notwithstanding the attestation by two witnesses the will was a soldier's will made in exercise of the privilege reserved by s. 11 & requiring no attestation; s. 15 of the Wills Act did not apply to a will so made; & the gift to the attesting witness was therefore valid.—Re LIMOND, LIMOND v. CUNLIFFE, [1915] 2 Ch. 240; 84 L. The husband of one of testator's daughters was an attesting witness to the will; the gift to her was therefore void under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15. The document was subscribed with three names, one of which purported to be the name of K. written in his own handwriting; the other two names were those of friends of testator. At the funeral deft., who was the eldest son of K. said that the document was no will of his father's, & that the signature was not in his writing. But he took no steps to assert his right as heir-at-law, & the widow continued to occupy the house & land until she died in July, 1885, without, however, taking any step to prove or establish the will she had so produced. After her death the will could not be found; & pltf., who was one of the daughters of the marriage, propounded the alleged will, & pleaded that although it was lost the ct. ought to grant probate of it. Both the persons whose names were subscribed to the lost document were dead. Another person who was present at the time of the execution, but did not attest, swore that testator did sign in the presence of the two witnesses. The ct. admitted the will to probate.—In the Goods of AUSTIN (1860), 24 J. P. 568.

1134. ——.]—Where a will appears to be duly executed, & there is a complete attestation clause, the presumption omnia rite esse acta applies, & is not rebutted by the defective memory of the attesting witness. Where the attestation clause is incomplete, the presumption also applies, but with less force.

The attestation clause to a will was informal, & the memory of the attesting witness was defective ; but it was proved that the will was signed by deceased, & that the witness had been in the room with him for the purpose of attesting it. The presumption omnia rite esse acta was held to prevail, & the ct. pronounced for the will.—VINNICOMBE v. BUTLER (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 580 ; 34 L. J. P. M. & A. 18 ; 29 J. P. 56 ; 10 Jur. N. 1135. ——.]—Where the attestation clause to a will is informal, & the attesting witnesses identify their signatures & that of testator, but have no recollection of the circumstances under which the will was executed, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the will was duly executed.—In the Goods of REES (1865), 34 L. J. P. M. & A. 56 ; 29 J. P. 296.

1136. ——.]—Testatrix left a holograph will, with no signature except that contained in the attestation clause, which had apparently been written after the attestation clause, but which the witnesses were unable to say was there when they signed. The ct. held that it was at liberty to judge from the circumstances of the case whether the signature was there at the time of attestation, & being of opinion that it was, granted probate of the will.—In the Goods of HINCKVALE (1867), 31 J. P. 664.

1137. —— No evidence as to proper execution—Presumption excluded.]—The attestation clause to a codicil was in form perfectly correct, & there was every external appearance of due execution, but the attesting witnesses were unable to depose as to the circumstances of the execution, the order of signing, whether they had signed in each other's presence, or whether testator's name had been signed when they witnessed the paper. The ct. declined to apply the presumption omnia rite esse acta, & refused probate of the codicil.—In the Goods of SWINFORD (1869), L. R. 1 P. & D. 630 ; 38 L. J. P. & M. 38 ; 20 L. T. 87 ; 33 J. 1138. ——.]—The sole surviving attesting witness to a will, which had been prepared by a person well accustomed to the making of wills, deposed that when she signed the will she did not see testatrix's signature, nor could she remember seeing the other attesting witness sign though she handed the pen to him. She had been requested by testatrix to witness her will & the ct. held the will to have been duly executed.—OLVER v. JOHNS (1869), 39 L. J. P. & M. 7 ; 21 L. T. 597 ; 34 J. P. 56.

1140. ——.]—The memory of two attesting witnesses to a will was not very clear whether they had signed it in each other's presence, but there were circumstances about the case which led them to the presumption that they had. The attestation clause also was correctly filled in :—Held : the will had been duly executed.—PITT v. PITT (1875), 39 J. P. 568.

1141. —— Nervous & confused at time of attestation.]—In 1878 testator, who was a good man of business but not a lawyer, wrote a holograph codicil upon the same paper as a will which he had made in 1868, & wrote at the end of it an attestation clause adapting that at the end of the will to the case of a codicil. He called the nurse into the schoolroom, & asked her & the nursery-governess to "sign this paper." There was evidence that he took his own pen into the room. Both witnesses signed. At the trial, which took place between four & five years afterwards, the codicil was produced bearing testator's signature, & both the attesting witnesses were examined. The governess deposed that she had designedly abstained from looking at any of the writing on the paper, & the nurse it appeared had been very nervous. Neither of them could say anything as to what writing was on the paper, nor as to whether testator's signature was there when they signed, & both said that they did not see him sign :—Held : as the codicil ex facie appeared to be properly executed, & the presumption omnia rite esse acta was strengthened by the conduct of testator, which showed an anxious & intelligent desire to do everything regularly, that presumption was not rebutted by the evidence of the witnesses, who appeared to have been nervous & confused on the occasion of the attestation, & whose recollection of what took place was evidently imperfect.—WRIGHT v. SANDERSON (1884), 9 P. D. 149 ; 50 L. T. 769 ; 48 J. P. 180 ; 32 W. R. 560 ; sub nom. Re SANDERSON, WRIGHT v. SANDERSON, 53 L. J. P. 49, C. A.

1145. Due execution presumed.]—A paper admitted to probate, on the testimony of one of the two attesting witnesses, although the other witness deposed, that it was not signed by testator in his presence ; the circumstances of the case inclining to favour the supposition of a due execution, e.g. a formal attestation clause ; & the first witness having, in an affidavit sworn a few days after the will was made, deposed to the due execution, the second witness not having been examined until two years & a half afterwards.—GOVE v. GAWEN (1842), 3 Curt. 151 ; 1 Notes of Cases, 536 ; 163 E. 1146. ——.]—Will pronounced against. Both attesting witnesses deposing against a signature according to the requisites of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9 ; & there being no circumstances on which the ct. could found a presumption that the recollection of the witnesses was infirm on the subject.

The ct. has to decide on the evidence of these two attesting witnesses ; the one having a strong impression that the paper was signed in his presence, although signed after he & his co-witness had subscribed ; the other having no doubt, being in fact quite certain that deceased did not sign at all in his presence. There are no circumstances of which I can give the party propounding the will the benefit, so as to pronounce for a due execution. Mrs. K. does not recollect anything about the transaction, & even if she could have stated that deceased signed in the presence of both witnesses, the ct. would have been left in great difficulty in coming to a decision that the will is duly executed ; because in order to do so it would be necessary to hold, according to the construction which the ct. has lately put on the Wills Act, that deceased signed before the witnesses subscribed ; this would be directly contrary to the evidence of both witnesses.

There are no circumstances in this case on which the ct. can rely to enable it to pronounce for this paper, & I must, therefore, refuse to decree probate of it (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—PENNANT v. KINGSCOTE (1843), 3 Curt. 642 ; 2 Notes of Cases, 405, n. ; 7 Jur. 754 ; 163 E. R. 853 ; sub nom. PENNANT v. SEDGWICK, 1 L. T. O. S. 412.

(2) The will contained alterations & erasures, affecting the amount & objects of testator's bounty, the existence of which, at the time of the execution, the attesting witnesses could not depose to : —Held : in the absence of all direct evidence as to the alterations & erasures, the presumption of law was, that such alterations & erasures were made after the execution of the will, & probate of the will granted in its original form.—COOPER v. BOCKETT (1846), 4 Moo. 1145 i. Due execution presumed.]—Where a solr. drew his will himself with a perfect attestation clause, which appeared attested by two witnesses of humble rank, & on the will being propounded, after the lapse of 7½ years from its date, one of the attesting witnesses swore, but not very positively, that testator signed his name to the will before the witnesses, while the other witness swore that at the time he signed the will testator's name was not signed to it, the ct., not relying on the memory of the latter, acted on the presumption in favour of the due execution of the will, & declared it well proved.—O'MEAGHER v. O'MEAGHER (1883), 11 L. was disbelieved by the judge & jury, & C., an ignorant man, proved his attestation, but did not remember the signing or publication by testatrix. The jury found for the will. The ct., under the circumstances, refused with costs an application for a new trial.

Presumption in favour of a will, apparently duly executed where one attesting witness was dead, the second denied her signature, but was not to be believed, & the third was of defective memory.—HITCH v. WELLS (1846), 10 Beav. 84; 50 E. R. 514.

1150. ——.]—On a question whether testatrix signed her name before or after the witnesses subscribed, one of the attesting witnesses deposed throughout her examination to the impression on her mind that testatrix signed after them; the other, in the first instance, likewise deposed to the same effect, but after having inspected the paper she deposed that testatrix signed before them:—Held: under the circumstances of the great experience testatrix had in executing wills, of her having sent to a solr. for instructions in regard to the paper in question, & of the paper on the face of it appearing to be duly signed & attested, the presumption was that the instrument was executed in conformity with the requisites of the statute.

The onus probandi is upon the person who sets up the instrument; but in a case where testatrix had previously executed a multitude of testamentary papers with reference to a settlement, & had recourse to a professional gentleman to prepare the paper in question, who gave special directions as to the mode of execution, & testatrix was exceedingly careful in pointing out to the witnesses the spot where they must sign their names, the presumption is very strong that the instrument was duly executed. . . .

Where both attesting witnesses positively declare that they did not sign their names till after the testator had signed, the case is conclusive, unless there be evidence to contradict them. Where the witnesses differ, the ct. must judge which is the more likely to be correct in the account given. Where the witnesses depose with doubt & hesitation, the ct. must look at all the circumstances, & see on which side the preponderance of probability rests (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—BRENCHLEY v. STILL (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 162; 163 E. R. 1277; sub nom. BRENCHLEY v. LYNN, 16 Jur. 226; affd., 16 Jur. p. 228, P. C.; subsequent proceedings (1852), 2 Rob. 1155. Acknowledgment of signature.]—If a will appears upon the face of it to have been properly executed according to the requirements of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), the presumption of law is, that testator duly acknowledged it.

The grant of probate to a will, which was entirely in the handwriting of the testator, an attorney, without break or crowding, with an attestation clause in its proper place, & attested by two witnesses, was opposed by the wife & daughter of testator, they having been entirely excluded from any benefit under it, on the ground that it was written after the witnesses attested the will. One of the attesting witnesses was dead. The other deposed that when he signed the will, with the exception of testator's signature, & the signature of the other attesting witness, the paper was blank:—Held: from the appearance of the will, as well as the circumstance that testator was a professional man well acquainted with the necessity of a proper execution, & the presumption of law; the will was written when attested, & had been duly acknowledged in the witnesses' presence, notwithstanding the testimony of the surviving attesting witness, who, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, must have been mistaken, or his memory failed him.—LLOYD v. ROBERTS (1858), 12 Moo. L. died in 1905. The extrix. took no steps to prove the document as a will, & died in 1924. In 1925 the document was found by pltf. in a desk which had been in the possession of the extrix. up to the time of her death. Both the attesting witnesses were dead. Pltf., as personal representative of his late wife, A., propounded as the will of L. this apparently duly executed document, which was a printed form of will filled up in a handwriting that was not proved, but containing signatures of L. & of two attesting witnesses, of whom the extrix. was one, the signatures of the attesting witnesses being opposite a formal attestation clause. All the signatures were proved to be in the handwriting of the respective persons:—Held: there was sufficient internal evidence to show that L. knew & approved of the contents of the will at the time of its execution; the suspicion arose at a later time & did not relate to the date of the execution; &, therefore, the presumption "omnia rite esse acta" must prevail, & in such circumstances the ct. would, without evidence aliunde, presume that the document was duly executed & that L. knew & approve of its contents.—In the Estate of MUSGROVE, DAVIS v. MAYHEW, [1927] P. 264; 96 L. See, also, No. 1144, ante.

1169. Evidence of surviving witness—No attestation clause.]—A. made her will in 1842; at her death there appeared the names of three subscribed witnesses, but no attestation clause. The only surviving witness, whose name stood first of the three, stated that testatrix signed the will in his presence only; that he suggested the necessity of two witnesses, but could remember no more particular circumstances:—Held: the presumption of due execution was not rebutted by the affidavit of the surviving witness.—In the Goods of THOMAS (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 255; 28 L. 1170. —— Information after long delay.]—Deceased signed his will in the presence of two witnesses, an attorney & his clerk, whose names were written at the foot of a full attestation clause. After the death of deceased, an affidavit was required as to certain interlineations which appeared on the face of the will, & such affidavit was prepared by the clerk on a printed form, the blanks being filled in by him. This affidavit was sworn to by the attorney & contained the usual clause of due execution, more especially that the witnesses had signed their names in the presence of the deceased. After the death of the attorney, the clerk for the first time gave information that the will was not signed by the witnesses in the presence of deceased, but in the attorney's office, & at the trial gave evidence to the same effect. this statement, was produced. The ct., on a review of all the circumstances, declined to act upon the recollection of the surviving witness, & decreed probate of the will as duly executed.

The ct. ought to have in all cases the strongest evidence before it believes that a will, with a perfect attestation clause, & signed by the testator, was not duly executed, otherwise the greatest uncertainty would prevail in the proving of wills (LORD PENZANCE).—WRIGHT v. ROGERS (1869), L. 1171. Evidence by person writing testator's name—Intended as guide for execution—Testator illiterate.]—The provisions of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 9, which provides that it is necessary that a will "shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by testator, or by some other person in his presence & by his direction," must be strictly complied with.

In some cases there was a presumption that the will had been duly executed, but in the present one the evidence had rebutted that presumption. It seemed clear that when the will was handed over by the solr.'s clerk, the day & month were in blank, although the year had been filled in, & that the pencil name was merely written in as an indication to testator as to where he should sign. That the solr.'s clerk was unaware that testator could neither read nor write was shown by the form of the attestation clause. The signature had never been put on the document by the direction of deceased & in his presence, & consequently could never have been subsequently acknowledged by him (GORELL BARNES, P.).—REEVES v. GRAINGER (1908), 52 Sol. By the will he appointed B., his exors., administrators & assigns, his sole exor. B. died in A.'s lifetime, having made a will whereof C., one of his exors., had taken probate. The ct. being satisfied that A. knew & approved of the contents of his will when he executed it, granted probate of it to C., limited to the said trust-fund.—Re AXFORD (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 540 ; 2 L. A. executed a will in 1858 & another dated "1855." Both wills contained clauses of revocation, & there was nothing in the second will inconsistent with its execution at the date it bore. She afterwards made a will, giving the interest of the money she had in the stocks to her servant maid for life, & afterwards to the poor of certain parishes. The wife having died, administration with the will of his deceased wife annexed was granted to her husband. To a bill filed by the husband alone, as such administrator, against the surviving trustee of the stock, deft., by her answer, suggested that the legatees under the will were necessary parties; but the ct., without requiring the legatees to be parties to the suit, ordered payment of the stock to pltf., with costs.—MUSTERS v. WRIGHT (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 777; 64 E. He bequeathed to J., the daughter of A., another legacy of £3,000; to his brother, his executor, a legacy of £1,000; a legacy of 50 guineas to A. P., & the residue to his mother. Testator was in the habit from time to time of investing his money in funds, securities & railway shares. A., who lived with him as his wife, claimed part of the securities so purchased as above to the amount of £3,180 stock, as a gift to her in testator's lifetime. The exor. filed a bill against A. for a declaration & account, alleging that the estate would prove insufficient to pay the debts & legacies unless the above property should be determined to form part of the estate:—Held: upon the evidence, there was clear proof of an absolute gift to A., & bill dismissed without costs with a direction that pltf.'s costs should not come out of the estate.—MCCULLOCH v. BLAND (1860), 2 Giff. 428; 3 L. Sect. 2.—Direction for employment of agents or persons to assist executors. Sect. 3.]

1193. Recommendation to executors—Employment of factor—Not imperative.]—A. by will devises all his estates to his eldest son in tail male, with remainders over; part of the property consisted of an estate in Jamaica, & therefore testator added the following clause: "& I recommend to my exors., that all sugars, rum, & other plantation produce that is sent to the port of London, be consigned to the house of C., E. & co. until such time as any of my sons shall set up in the business of a sugar factor; then my desire is, that the consignments may pass through his or their hands." C., a natural son of testator's, set up the business of a sugar factor, during the minority of the devisee, & accordingly got the consignments. Upon the devisee's coming of age, C. accounted with him, but insisted on being entitled to his commission not only upon the produce which he had actually sold, but also upon the produce which had been consigned to him, but was not then arrived in the port of London:—Held: the words of the above clause were not imperative, or amounted to words of bequest in favour of C. but were recommendatory only.—BECKFORD v. BECKFORD (1783), 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 38; 2 E. R. 26.

1195. —— —— "My particular desire."]—Testator devised certain real estates to trustees for the use of W. S. for life, with remainders over, & he directed the residue of his personal estate to be invested in the purchase of other real estates. He gave a legacy of £100 to B. E. L. as a token of esteem. The will then contained this clause, "& it is also my particular desire that my said exors., whilst acting in the management of all or any of my affairs under this my will, as also my friend W. S. when he shall enter into the receipt & perception of my said rents of K. V. & K., shall continue the said B. E. L. in the receipt & management thereof, & likewise shall employ & retain him in the receipt, agency, & management of the rents & issues of such other lands & premises as shall & may be purchased & settled in pursuance of the directions hereinbefore contained, at the usual fees allowed to agents, he having acted for me since I became possessed of said estates fully to my satisfaction":—Held: these words did not create a trust in favour of B. E. L.—SHAW v. LAWLESS (1838), 5 Cl. & Fin. 129; 7 E. R. 353, H. L.

1197. —— Solicitor.]—A direction in a will appointing a particular person solr. to the trust estate imposes no trust or duty on the trustees of the will to continue such person their solr. in the management & affairs of the estate.—FOSTER v. ELSLEY (1881), 19 Ch. 1198. Power of trustees to dismiss—Auditor.]—Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to apply the rents in paying off incumbrances, & directed them to employ A. to audit their accounts, & to allow him a proper salary:—Held: the trustees could not, arbitrarily, remove A. from his office; but he was entitled to hold it as long as he was willing & able, & to receive an adequate salary.—WILLIAMS v. CORBET (1837), 8 Sim. 349; 6 L. J. Ch. 182; 59 E. R. 138.

Annotation:—Refd. Finden v. Stephens (1846), 1 Coop. temp. Cott. 318.

1199. —— Agent — Misconduct.] — Testator having by will devised his property upon certain trusts to trustees whom he also appointed exors., by a codicil willed as follows, "I appoint K. my agent, at a salary of £150 a year, & to be paid by quarterly payments, to live in my house called the H., with the garden belonging to it, for which such salary he must do my business, & the business of my exors. & trustees, & not be employed in the service of any other person or persons; to live rent free as long as he continues to be my agent, that is, as long as he does my business honestly & to the satisfaction of my exors. & trustees, or any one of them."

K. having refused to deliver up certain leases to the trustees, & otherwise to obey their directions, was dismissed from the agency by one of the trustees, such dismissal being afterwards approved by the other of them; but he declined to give up possession of the house called the H.; & upon ejectment by the trustees against him:—Held: the utmost interest which K. had in the house was an estate so long as he did the business of the trustees honestly & to their satisfaction; the direction in the codicil amounted only to a recommendation to the trustees to continue him as agent, & they were the judges whether or not he had done the business to their satisfaction, the burden being on deft. to show that they had dismissed him capriciously, or maliciously, or without reasonable warrant.—BELANEY v. KELLY (1871), 24 L. T. 738; 19 W. R. 1171.

SECT. 3.—PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

1200. Presumption of death & survivorship—Evidence.]—A sum of money being given under a will to such of a class of persons as should be surviving at the death of a person having a life interest therein, one of the class went to sea, & was not heard of for many years before the death of the life tenant, which was in 1825, nor since. His share of the fund, which was very small, was ordered to be paid to the survivors of the class, on the presumption, from the evidence, of his death before the life tenant, although the Master of the Rolls was not quite satisfied that he had before him the best evidence which might be obtained as to the time of the death.—ROLFE v. WRIGHT (1845), 4 L. T. O. S. 431.

1201. —— Leave to swear death—Practice.]—Upon a motion to swear that testator died on or since a certain day, & for probate of his will, the estate partly consisted of policies upon testator's life. The ct. declined to accede to the application until notice thereof had been given to the insurance co.—In the Goods of KIRKBRIDE (1891), 55 J. P. 503.

1202. Wills proved abroad—Doubt as to correctness of grant.]—Administration, with a copy of the will annexed, of a party domiciled in Scotland, granted, in conformity with the grant of the ct. of competent jurisdiction in Scotland, though the judge of the Prerogative Ct. entertained great doubt as to the correctness of the grant in Scotland.—In the Goods of HENDERSON (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 144; 7 Notes of Cases, 378; 163 E. R. 1271.

1203. —— Estate undervalued—Evidence as to real value.]—An exor. residing abroad had sworn the value of an estate at an amount which turned out to be considerably under its real value. The ct. allowed the agent of the exor. in this country, who was well acquainted with the estate, to reswear it at its real value.—In the Goods of URRUELA (1869), L. R. 1 P. & D. 598; 38 L. J. P. 471.

1212. —— ——.]—Where a will was deposited by testator with his agent, &, subsequently to testator's death, was examined by the latter, & found to have been duly executed, & wherein he was named exor., but the will was afterwards lost or mislaid, the ct. granted probate of the substance of the will to the agent, limited in operation until the discovery of the lost instrument, no opposition having been made by the next of kin.—In the Goods of LANGTRY (1862), 1 New Rep. 194.

1214. 1215. —— ——.]—A will & codicil, propounded by a party, as exor. & joint residuary legatee, taking a large interest under the will, suing in forma pauperis, pronounced against, the circumstances of the transaction showing fraud & conspiracy.—WINTLE & DOWDING v. FORD (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 517.

1216. —— —— Onus of proof.]—The High Ct., considering it to have been proved by the evidence that the alleged testator was incapable, by reason of illness, of signing the will as firmly as it purported to be signed, found that the signatures were not genuine, & reversed the decree of the first ct. which had granted probate. On appeal there was no view of the signatures, neither party having applied to have the originals transmitted, or to have photographs taken of them. But their lordships found that the evidence did not warrant the conclusion that on the day on which the will purported to have been executed testator physically & mentally was unable to execute it; but that there was sufficient evidence to establish the genuineness of the will & the capacity of testator to make it, & that the evidence for the defence was not sufficient to destroy petitioner's case on either of these points.—BAMA SOONDARI DEBI v. TARA SOONDARI DEBI (1891), L. by a will prepared by another law agent. A.'s next of kin brought an action against B. to reduce the will on the ground of undue influence on his part. The following facts were proved: A. & her sister many years before their death delivered to B. a letter stating their desire to leave to him the residue of their respective estates. He declined to act in such a matter, & returned the letter advising them to leave their money to their relatives, but upon their adhering to their intention & naming another agent as suitable to prepare a formal will he called upon that agent & told him their wishes. That agent prepared for each of them a will by which she gave her estate to the other, & failing the other to B. A.'s sister having died, A. from time to time made alterations in her will, but left the gift of residue unaltered. Her will was never in the custody of B. It was proved that B. was an old family friend for whom testators entertained a high regard. A. lived for sixteen years after the making of the will:—Held: the will having been duly executed & the sanity & testamentary capacity of testatrix having been admitted, the onus lay upon the persons challenging the will on the ground of undue influence to prove fraud or coercion, & the pursuers had failed to do so.—WEIR v. GRACE (1899), 2 F. 1219. Recall of letters of administration—Testamentary paper found & propounded—Probate refused—Letters of administration redelivered.]—Administration had been granted to deceased as dead intestate, a testamentary paper was afterwards found, the administration was called in, & the paper propounded, it appearing not to be a final & complete disposition of the property of deceased, probate of it was refused, & the letters of administration redelivered out.—SQUIRE v. CARTER (1848), 11 L. T. O. S. 228; 12 Jur. 587.

1220. Administration with will annexed—When granted—Executor renouncing.]—By her will, testatrix gave all her property to her friend J. C. B. "for her own use, & also for the education, maintenance, & placing out in business of her son H. E. B."; but in case the said J. C. B. should die during the minority of the said H. E. B., testatrix directed "the money arising from all the property to be laid out or invested" by her exor. "for his use & benefit until he shall attain the age of twenty-one, when whatever remains shall be handed over to him." J. C. B. died before testatrix, but after the said H. E. B. had attained the age of twenty-one. The exor. renounced, &, there being no known next of kin of testatrix, & the Queen's Proctor declining to interfere, the ct. granted administration with the will annexed to H. E. B., the surviving beneficiary.—In the Goods of ARMS (1894), 71 L. T. 699; 11 R. 587.

1221. —— Costs.]—A married woman, entitled under her marriage settlement to a rentcharge for life for her separate use, made a will operative to pass separate estate, became a lunatic, survived her husband, & died without having republished her will or made another. Her rentcharge was accumulated by her husband during his life to the amount of £13,000, which sum on his death was handed over to the trustee of the marriage settlement. The rentcharge & the income of the £13,000 were both accumulated by the trustee after the husband's death. The will purported to be, but was not, in exercise of a power of appointment; the fund purported to be appointed, except so much as passed as separate estate, fell into the general residue:—Held: in an administration action, the fund which passed by the will was liable to the costs of letters of administration with the will annexed.—Re WILSON, MENTEATH v. CAMPBELL (1878), 26 W. 1222. Costs of probate actions—Litigation caused by act of testatrix.]—Where the litigation was caused by the act of testatrix & the state in which she left her papers, the ct. allowed costs out of the estate to the heir-at-law as well as the next of kin, their interests being different & the heir-at-law, who appeared on citation, having in no way embarrassed the contest.—SMYTH v. WILSON (1866), 36 L. 1223. — Litigation due to secrecy in preparation of will.]—Testatrix directed by her will that all her "just debts, funeral & testamentary expenses be paid & discharged out of her real & personal estate." She died possessed of no personal estate, & the litigation in relation to her will was in some measure due to its concealment, by her direction, from deft. in the suit, who opposed probate of it, but failed. In the circumstances of the case the ct. was of opinion that deft. was entitled to his costs, & ordered such costs to be paid rateably out of the real estate.—SMITH v. HOPKINSON (1878), 4 P. 1231. —— ——.]—Testator gave legacies to trustees, in trust for his daughters for their separate use for their lives, & after their deaths, for their children. By a codicil, after reciting that he had settled on his daughters fortunes which he was satisfied his property would allow of being increased, he gave to each of them £500, which he directed not to be settled, but to be paid to them. By a second codicil, he gave to his wife £3,000 in lieu of £1,000 which he had given her by his will. His property proved insufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held: the legacies given by the first codicil were postponed to the legacies given to the daughters by the will, & also to the legacy given to the wife by the second codicil.—STAMMERS v. HALLILEY (1841), 12 Sim. 42; 5 Jur. 817; 59 E. 1232. —— —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed to C. the full amount of whatever sum H. might be indebted to C. at testator's decease. Testator added, "& it is my positive will that the amount required for the payment of the same, whatever it may be, be taken out of the amount of that share to which H. becomes entitled to a life interest under my will." The share of H. proved insufficient to pay the debt:—Held: this was not a demonstrative legacy to C., & his debt could only be satisfied out of the assets so far as the share of H. therein would extend.—COARD v. HOLDERNESS (1856), 22 Beav. 391; 52 E. PART VI. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

c. Distribution of residue—Whether executor beneficially entitled.]—Testator devised & bequeathed all his realty & personalty to a sole devisee & legatee who died before testator. Testator, who was illegitimate, died without having altered his will & without issue. Testator appointed as exor. a solr. who became a witness to the execution of the will, which he had prepared:—Held: the fact that the whole of testator's property was devised & bequeathed to a universal legatee raised the presumption that testator intended only to give the office, & not the beneficial interest in his residuary estate to the exor., & the exor. held the personalty as trustee for the Crown by way of escheat under Real Property Act, 1915, s. 177.—Re YOUNG, BROWN v. HANSFORD, [1923] V. L. R. 6.—AUS.

d. —— ——.]—Held: the provision made for exors. indicated that testator did not intend them to take the residue beneficially; &, by Trustee Act, 1914, s. 58, they held the residue in trust for the next of kin, who would take upon an intestacy, if there were next of kin; &, there being no next of kin, the exors. held for the Crown.—Re ASPEL (1918), 42 O. e. —— Divided between hospitals at & abroad.]—Testator domiciled in Ontario, left a large estate; about one-half of his property was situated in England & the other half in Canada & U.S.A. By the will, made in Ontario, the property was given to the exors. in trust to convert, & pay certain legacies & annuities, &, subject to these to divide the residue as it should become free, in equal parts between a hospital in Ontario & one in England. Some of the funds derived from the English property being available for division between the hospital a question as to the course which the exors. ought to pursue in making the division having regard to the rates of exchange arose:—Held: when the exors. had available in England a sum which they desired to divide between the hospitals, they ought to give one-half of it to the English hospital, & with the other half buy Canadian Exchange & pay over the proceeds of the draft to the Ontario hospital; & vice versa when the exors. should have funds available in Ontario.—Re Cox (1921), 67 D. h. Sale in order to pay legacy charged on land.]—Testator devised to his daughter a lot of land charged with a legacy. 1236. —— —— —— —.]—Testator gave his wife his freehold estate of B., & certain specific chattels; & also an annuity for her life, charged upon all his real estates, except B., with power of distress for the same, the first payment thereof to be made on the 1st of May or Nov. which should first happen after his decease. He then charged his debts upon his real estates, except B., in aid of his personal estate; & gave an annuity to his sister, in similar terms to those used respecting that given to his wife. He next gave several pecuniary legacies to nieces & others, to be paid by his trustees, as soon as convenient after his decease, out of the residue of his personal estate, & in deficiency thereof, to be raised & paid by them, as they should think proper, out of his real estates, except B., & he charged the same therewith. He lastly gave two annuities to his servants, in similar terms to those used respecting the preceding annuities.

The personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts & legacies; the real estate was insufficient to pay the annuities & legacies:—Held: upon the true construction of the provisions of the will, as to the real estate, the annuities were entitled to priority over the legacies.—CREED v. CREED (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 491; 8 Jur. 943; 8 E. At the time of testator's death there was a sufficient fund in the agent's hands to answer this legacy; but the general assets did not extend to the payment of both. 1238. —— —— Residuary legacy.]—Testatrix gave several life annuities & directed funds to be invested, producing an income sufficient to meet them. She bequeathed the residue of her estate, "including the fund set apart to answer the annuities when & so soon as such annuities shall respectively cease," to J. The estate was only sufficient to pay about 5*s.* in the pound on the legacies & the values of the life annuities, & under an order of the ct. the sums apportioned to the values of the life annuities were invested, & the dividends paid to the annuitants. On the death of one of the annuitants, J. applied for payment to him of the fund of which that annuitant had been receiving the income:—Held: J. had only the ordinary rights of a residuary legatee, & could take nothing until the legacies & annuities had all been paid in full, & his application must be dismissed.—Re TOOTAL'S ESTATE, HANKIN v. KILBURN (1876), 2 Ch. 1239. —— —— Provision for abatement in will.]—Testatrix bequeathed numerous legacies & annuities, which she charged on her personal estate, & gave the residue of her personal estate to W., & desired it to be understood that she made W. sole residuary legatee in consideration of his having a very large family of children. By a codicil testatrix directed that should the income from the residue of her personal estate, calculated at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum, be insufficient to meet all the annuities in full, each of the pecuniary legatees above £100 should abate pro rata in order to enable her exors. or residuary legatee to raise a further sum, & from the income or interest thereof to make up such deficiency. The income of the residuary estate proved insufficient to meet the annuities in full:—Held: the lagacies above £100 must abate permanently, & the deficiency fund went to the residuary legatee.—HICHENS v. HICHENS (1876), 36 L. T. 8; 25 W. R. 249.

1240. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix gave legacies of £100 to each of her exors. & trustees & then bequeathed all her plate, jewellery, ornaments, china, & other household effects to two specific legatees absolutely. The whole of her residuary property of every kind she devised, bequeathed & appointed to her trustees upon trust to sell & out of the proceeds first, to pay her funeral & testamentary expenses, debts, & the legacy duty; secondly, to appropriate & set apart two sums of £4,000 & £2,000 to be held upon certain trusts for life & then over; & thirdly, to pay a number of pecuniary legacies, including one of £600; & testatrix declared that should her residuary personal estate be insufficient to pay all the legacies then the legacy of £600 should be reduced to £500; & every legacy & annuity was bequeathed free of legacy duty. There was a deficiency in the estate:—Held: (i) there were sufficient indications in the will that testatrix intended the distribution of her estate to be in accordance with the priorities mentioned, & the settled legacies must be paid in full before all the other pecuniary legacies; (ii) the legacy of £600 must be reduced to £500, & this reduced legacy, plus the duty, must abate pro rata with the other postponed legacies, including those to the exors.—Re LEACH, MILNE v. DAUBENY, [1923] 1 Ch. 161; 92 L. J. Ch. 225; 128 L. T. 525; 67 Sol. Jo. 198.

1241. —— —— Personal legacies—Legacies to charities.]—Testator bequeathed certain personal legacies, & continued, "after making provision for the above-mentioned sums, I direct" certain legacies to be paid to charities. The estate was insufficient to pay all the legacies in full:—Held: the personal legacies had priority over the charities.—Re OLIVIERI, HAMILL v. RUSCONI (1912), 56 Sol. Jo. 613, C. A.

1244. Legacies to debtors—Whether debt released.] — An illegitimate son of testator was entitled to a legacy of £1,000 under testator's will, made in 1883. Some few years before his death testator had advanced the legatee £500, which was to have been repaid by instalments lasting over some years. No part of the £500 had, in fact, ever been repaid. The legatee now contended that the debt had been released, as testator had constantly mentioned the loan in letters to the legatee as being wholly lost to testator, & testator had continued down to the time of his death to pay the legatee an allowance without making any kind of deduction from it :—Held : the law on the case was correctly & concisely stated in " Williams on Executors " in these words—" Where a creditor bequeaths a legacy to his debtor, & either does not notice the debt or mentions it in such a manner as to leave his intention doubtful, & after his death the securities for the debt, if any exist, are found uncancelled, the cts. of equity do not consider the legacy to the debtor as necessarily or even primâ facie a release or extinguishment of the debt."—QUIN v. SEFI (1884), 1 T. 1257. ——— Whether interest payable out of real or personal estate—Construction of will.]—C. by his will devised to trustees all his real estates for a term of five hundred years, upon trust, if there should be issue of his marriage, to raise & pay to his wife during her life an annuity of £2,000 in addition to a provision of £400 a year made for her by the will of his father, but in satisfaction of dower. The further trusts of this term were to raise portions for younger children, with provisions for maintenance; & in case of a deficiency of personal estate to pay debts & the legacies given by the will, to raise after the death of his wife, by sale, etc., of the term, such sum as should be sufficient to discharge the legacies, etc.: & subject to the term, he limited the estates to his first & other sons in tail male, remainder to his daughters, in tail general; & in default of such issue, to his wife for her life in lieu of dower, & in satisfaction of all provision by his own or his father's will; with remainders over. Testator then gave to M., his wife's sister, £4,000 to be paid within one year after his death, with interest at 5 per cent. until paid; & £3,000 to be laid out in the public funds upon trust, to pay the interest to the separate use of O., a married sister of his wife, & the principal to the use of her children at her death. He then bequeathed to divers persons, his kinsmen & others, a great number of pecuniary legacies of various amounts, but only in the event of his dying without issue living at his death; & many of these legacies were limited for life interests to parents, with remainder to children. Finally, testator by his will gave a legacy of £2,000 in trust for a charity, & £2,000 to his wife, which he directed should be paid to her in any event, & in preference to all other legacies, except the charitable bequest, with interest from his decease, at 5 per cent. He then directed "that all the legacies by his will bequeathed, should from the time when they should respectively become payable, bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent., & he raised & paid accordingly; that his funeral & administration expenses, & the charitable bequest, should be paid out of the produce of his personal estate; that the residue thereof should be applied in payment of his debts, & the other legacies which should take effect & become payable under his will; & in case his personal estate should be insufficient for that purpose, he charged the lands, etc., comprised in the term, with the payment of such debts & legacies, & directed the trustees to raise same, pursuant to the trusts vested in them for that purpose"; & subject to the payment of such debts & legacies, testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his wife. Testator died without leaving issue. The personal estate was deficient, & after application of the rents, etc. of the real estates comprised in the term to supply the deficiency, including interest upon the legacies, there would be a surplus of rents amounting to £3,400 to which the widow as tenant for life under the will would have been entitled:—Held: the interest upon the legacies was payable out of the real estate, during the life of the wife.—MILLTOWN (EARL) v. TRENCH (1837), 11 Bli. 1258. ——— Abatement of legacies.]—Testator bequeathed his personal estate to trustees upon trust to place out so much money in the funds as would produce a yearly sum of £100 to be paid to his wife, & then to place out the further sum of £2,120 upon the like securities, & pay the dividends of part thereof to W. for life, & afterwards to his children, & the remainder of the £21,120 to other persons named; & testator declared that in case his estate should not be sufficient to pay the legacies in full previously to the death of his wife, then such legacies should only be paid in part during the life of his wife, & the same should be made up after her decease. The estate proved to be insufficient to pay the legacies in full during the life of testator's wife:—Held: the legatees were only entitled to interest upon the unpaid portion of their legacies from the time at which the remainder should be capable of being paid up.—HOLMES v. CRISPE (1849), 18 L. J. Ch. 439.

1259. ——— Direction to pay debts of another—Debts owing by deceased brother "at time of his death"—Interest not paid.]—Direction in a will to pay & discharge all the just & lawful debts owing by a deceased brother at the time of his death:—Held: upon the terms of the will, & looking to the circumstance the brother had been dead about forty years at the date of the will, to comprise debts, but not interest.—ASKEW v. THOMPSON (1858), 4 K. & J. 620; 70 E. 1260. ——— Right of legatee to share in increase of funds.]—Testator by his will gave his real & residuary personal estate upon trust for sale & conversion, & as to the sum of £20,000, part of the trust moneys, upon trust for his son C. for life, with remainder to C.'s children, giving the residue of the trust moneys between his other two sons, & giving his trustees a discretionary power to postpone the sale & conversion of the estate so long as seemed to them expedient.

The trustee, who was one of the residuary legatees, neither paid nor appropriated funds to meet the legacy of £20,000, but retained the trust estate in its original state of investment, meanwhile paying C. interest at 4 per cent. upon the amount of the legacy. The investments of the estate having risen considerably in value, C. & his children, more than ten years after the death of testator, claimed to participate in the increase of value, on the ground that the trustee, being a residuary legatee, could not retain profits caused by his own default:—Held: the residuary legatees must be treated as owners of the estate, subject to a charge thereon of the legacy, & C. & his children were only entitled to the amount of their legacy with interest at 4 per cent. from the end of the year after the death of testator.—Re CAMPBELL, CAMPBELL v. CAMPBELL, [1893] 3 Ch. 468; 62 L. She then gave several pecuniary legacies, & directed all the above-named legacies to be paid within three months after her death. The exors. were unable to get in the assets until four years after testatrix's death, at which time the 3 per cents. had risen:—Held: the direction for payment of the legacies did not apply to the first bequest; but A. was entitled to have the full sum of £2,500 stock purchased, & to be paid the amount of the dividends from testatrix's death.—OWDEN v. CAMPBELL (1837), 8 Sim. 551; 6 L. There was no description or reference in the will to show that testator intended to give the particular shares which he held at the date of his will. At his death he possessed no Leeds & Liverpool Canal shares: Held: the legacies were general, & not specific.—ROBINSON v. ADDISON (1840), 2 Beav. 515; 9 L. J. Ch. 369; 4 Jur. 647; 48 E. R. 1281.

1307. —— Bequest of property, stock & money—In terms including whole residue.]—Testator gave certain legacies to his trustees & to his wife, & then gave to his trustees copyhold & leasehold property, & all the stocks, funds & securities & all sums of money in his house or at his bankers or elsewhere at the time of his death, & also all debts or sums of money & securities for money owing to him, upon trust to pay to his wife, in addition to the legacies & bequests therein given, an annuity, &, subject to the annuity, gave this property to two children equally. He then gave several other specific bequests, & gave the residue of his property to trustees upon trust for his wife, but subject to the payment of debts, legacies & other charges:—Held: the gift of copyhold & leasehold properties, & of stocks, funds, securities & debts was specific, &, as there was no residuary estate out of which to pay the legacies, they must fail.—ROFFEY v. EARLY (1873), 42 L. 1310 i. Liability of real or personal estate for payment of debts & legacies.]—Where testator devised certain real estate specifically, & also made specific the same as if testator had given his goods, lands & chattels, subject to what was given before.

The goods, lands & chattels are given altogether as one fund, & lands are inserted in the middle, & the whole are subject to the exception of what was given before; this, I think, amounts to the same, as if he had given them subject to what was given before; therefore, I think this legacy is a charge on the lands (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—EDGELL v. HAYWOOD (1746), 3 Atk. 352; 26 E. A. afterwards by deed appointed that when the estate tail should be spent, & the term come into possession, the trustee should raise £2,000 for W. & covenanted that if the estate tail should be spent in his own lifetime, then he would pay the £2,000 unto W.; but if not till after his death, & he should revoke the term of ninety-nine years, then that his heirs, exors., etc., should, within a year after the estate tail should be spent, pay the £2,000 to W. with a proviso that if N. should suffer a recovery of the premises & bar the remainder in fee, the £2,000 should not be payable. A. afterwards by will revoked all the uses of the first settlement "to all intents & purposes whatsoever, as if the same had never been limited"; & thereby devised all the premises "subject nevertheless to payment of the sum of £2,000 to W." in manner therein mentioned. A. died & afterwards N. died. 1321. —— ——.]—J. devised real estate to his son A. in fee, & also gave to A. the residue of his effects, & directed that his son, A. should pay unto his, J.'s, grandson a certain sum by instalments. A. paid several sums on account of the instalments, & then refused to pay any more, on the ground that the personal estate was insufficient:—Held: under the terms of the will the legacy was charged on the real as well as on the personal estate, & A. himself was personally liable in case the assets should be deficient.—PRESTON v. PRESTON (1856), 2 Jur. N. S. 1040; 4 W. R. 455.

1322. —— ——.]—Testator devised his freehold estates to trustees for one hundred & twenty years upon trust that they should enter into possession of & manage them, & out of the "rents & profits" pay such of his debts as the personal estate should be insufficient to pay, & also pay thereout the interest on incumbrances, & £50 a year to each of the acting trustees, & £200 a year to J. for life, & should accumulate the residue of the rents & profits for twenty years after the death of the survivor of five persons named in the will, & apply the fund in discharge of the incumbrances on the estates. Subject to the term of one hundred & twenty years he devised his estates to J. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, with remainder to pltf. for life, with remainder to pltf.'s sons in tail male, with remainders over.

By a codicil testator revoked the devise of his freehold estates for the one hundred & twenty years' term, & instead, devised them to his trustees for two hundred years, upon trust that they should raise out of the "rents & profits" such sums as they should in their discretion think necessary to be raised in aid of his personal estate for payment of his debts, other than his mtge. debts, & the legacies bequeathed by his will, & should pay the moneys to be raised accordingly; & should also out of the "rents & profits" raise £1,000 annually until the death of J., & invest the same & accumulate the interest thereof, & apply the trust fund in payment of incumbrances on the estates. Subject to the term of two hundred years he devised his estates to J. for life, & after his death to the trustees for one hundred & twenty years upon trust that they should enter into possession of & manage the estates, & out of the "rents & profits" pay the expenses of management, & invest & accumulate the residue of the "rents & profits" for twenty years after the death of the survivor of the five persons named therein, & apply the last-mentioned trust funds in payment of incumbrances. Subject to these changes testator confirmed the dispositions made by his will.

The personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts. J. survived testator & died without issue. Pltf. then became tenant for life in possession. On special case:—Held: according to the ordinary legal construction of the words in the codicil, testator intended the deficiency between the personal estate & the amount of the debts to be raised by an assignment of the two hundred years' term. The ct. accordingly declared that the debts other than mtge. debts, so far as the personalty was insufficient, were primarily charged on the corpus of the estate in exoneration of the income, & were raisable out of the corpus.—FITZHERBERT v. WELD (1875), 24 W. a. Mariner's will admitted to probate—Construction.]—The last will of W., a seaman, was written on the face of an envelope addressed to G., to whom he was engaged to be married, the will being covered by two large postage stamps & being in the words following: "If I never return my will for you is $2,500 my share land shares vessels remainder for mother." The will was found through directions written on the inside of the envelope & was admitted to probate:—Held: the will was properly interpreted as giving to G., in addition to the money gift, the shares of vessels owned by deceased, but the devise of the share of land could not be given effect to, a will of this kind being applicable only to personal property.—Re WENTZELL'S ESTATE (1919), 52 N. His testamentary disposition was contained in a document purporting to be a will which he signed at his house at Holyhead between voyages. Deceased was drowned when the L. was sunk:—Held: deceased was "a seaman," but was not "a seaman being at sea" within Wills Act, 1837, s. 11, when he signed the said document purporting to be his will.—BARNARD v. BIRCH, [1919] 2 I. 1370. Alterations made before execution of will.]—Testator wrote out his will in 1885 & signed & dated it, but did not have it attested. He subsequently destroyed all but the last sheet, & wrote out two fresh sheets, which he attached to the last sheet. He then, in 1888, inked over his signature in the presence of two attesting witnesses, who duly signed their names at the foot of the attestation clause. Testator died in 1889, & after his death the will was found with the name of the residuary legatee altered, & with several other alterations, all being in testator's own handwriting. There was no evidence as to when these were made. The next of kin & heir-at-law concurred in the application of the sole exor. for probate. The ct. admitted the will to proof.—MAULE v. MAULE (1890), 62 L. T. 702.

1371. Alterations made after execution of will.]—Upon the death of A. a will was found, in which a legacy to B. was erased, but so as to be legible. One of the attesting witnesses stated that the erasure was made before the execution of the will; the other witness had no recollection on the subject; & evidence was given tending to show that the erasure was made after execution. (3) Sect. 21 [Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26)] enacts that, where the words or effect of the will before the alteration shall not be apparent, then the obliteration shall be valid. 1388. —— Final or deliberate alterations.]—S. executed a will in 1776, & in 1778 he executed a copy of the will & a codicil in duplicate on the same day. The main object of the codicil was to provide for the lessor of pltf., who was his youngest son, born in 1777. In 1808 S. died leaving four sons him surviving. After his death the will of 1776, with the duplicate codicil annexed, was found in his portfolio; & the will executed in 1778, with duplicate codicil annexed, in a box in the same room. The will & codicil in the portfolio contained erasures which diverted the limitation of certain estates from the younger sons to the eldest son. The altered will & codicil were proved by the extrix., & acted upon until the death of all the sons of S., except the lessor of pltf., who, when his turn to inherit according to the unaltered will arrived, brought ejectment against deft., the successor of the eldest son of S.

The judge asked the jury, whether the two wills with the duplicate codicil annexed to each, formed the last will of S. Whether the erasures in the will & codicil in the portfolio were intended to be final or deliberative only, & he directed the jury that if their opinion on these two questions was in the affirmative, then the cancellation of one part was the cancellation of the other part, & the passage uncancelled was the last will of S.:—Held: the questions left to the jury & the direction, in point of law, were correct.—DOE d. 1450. —— Testator's knowledge of statutory requirements.]—Unattested alterations in the will of a barrister, without evidence as to when made, on presumption, admitted to probate.

Deceased was a gentleman whom we all knew & all lament. From the tenour & context of the will, it would appear that he made these alterations as he wrote it. Looking to the contents of the paper, & to the character of a gentleman high in his profession, & to the manner in which the attestation clause is expressed, I cannot suppose that the alterations were made after execution, knowing, as he must have done, what was required by the Act. I am clearly of opinion that they were made by him at the time the will was written, & there is no one circumstance which leads to the presumption that they were done afterwards. Under these circumstances, the ct. is bound to decree probate of the paper in the form in which it now appears ; & there can be no doubt that, as he went on, & read what he had written, he made these alterations (SIR H. It must be understood that, where papers are found in this state, the envelopes or packets ought to be preserved & brought in."—In the Goods of SIMMONDS (1845), 4 Notes of Cases, 180.

1458. Onus of proof—On party relying on alterations—To prove that alteration made before execution of will.]—DOE d. SHALLCROSS v. PALMER, No. 1462, post.

1459. ——.]—By Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 21, obliterations, interlineations, or other alterations in a will, after execution, are void, if not affirmed in the margin, or otherwise, by the signature of testator, & the attestation of witnesses.

The mere circumstance of the amount, or the name of a legatee, being inserted in different ink, & in a different handwriting, does not alone constitute an obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, within that Act, nor does any presumption arise against a will being duly executed as it appears. The case is different where there is an erasure apparent on the face of the will, & that erasure has been superinduced by other writing. In such circumstances, the onus probandi lies upon the party who alleges such alteration to have been done prior to execution, to prove by extrinsic evidence, that the words were inserted before execution, & that they had the sanction of testator. —GREVILLE v. TYLEE (1851), 7 Moo. P. C. C. 320 ; 13 E. R. 904, P. C.

1460. ——.]—Where there are alterations on the face of a will there is no presumption of law that they were made at any particular time ; but the rule applicable to such cases is that those who propound a doubtful instrument must make the doubt clear.

Therefore, where testatrix told the witnesses to her will, at the time of attestation, that she had made alterations in her will, but did not allow them to see what the alterations were :—Held : in the absence of any means to determine what alterations were made before execution, the ct. could not give effect to any of them.—WILLIAMS v. ASHTON (1860), 1 John. & H. 115 ; 3 L. 1461. ——.]—Testatrix duly executed a draft of a will, in which at the time were several marginal notes & alterations, in the handwriting of her solr. About four years after, a codicil was executed, in which no reference was made to the contents of the will. These papers remained in the custody of testatrix until her death. It was then found that a marginal note, disposing of the residue of the personalty, & several bequests, had been struck through with a pen, & other alterations had been made, in the handwriting of testatrix :—Held : as no affirmative evidence was produced to satisfy the ct. that these last-mentioned obliterations & alterations were made before execution, whether the date of the execution were taken to be that of the will or of the codicil, the presumption in law was that they were made subsequently, & that they could not, therefore, be included in the probate.—ROWLEY v. MERLIN (1860), 24 J. are to be presumed to have been made after the will was executed, until evidence to the contrary is adduced. It appeared on the face of a holograph will that, as it was originally written, certain real estate was thereby devised to A. in fee, but, by an erasure & interlineation in the same handwriting, that devise was changed into a devise to A. for life, with remainder to B., of whom no other mention was made in the will. Testator died in 1834, A. was his heir-at-law. The devisee of A. brought ejectment against B. Evidence was tendered & admitted on the trial that testator had, on various occasions, before the will was executed, stated that he intended to make provision for B. by his will:—Held: it was necessary for deft. to rebut the presumption of the alterations having been made after the will was executed by adducing some evidence of their having been made before. Also, that the declarations of testator made before the execution of the will were admissible evidence from which a jury might draw that inference, since the alteration was made in furtherance of an intention shown to have existed before the execution of the will. But that declarations by testator after the will was executed, tending to show that the alterations had been made before, would be inadmissible.—DOE d. SHALLCROSS v. PALMER (1851), 16 Q. One clause was unintelligible, but an unattested interlineation in testator's handwriting made the clause intelligible when taken with it, & also in accordance with declarations proved to have been made by testator before the execution of the will. Evidence was also given tending to prove that the will had been kept in a fastened-up envelope from five days after its date in 1867 to a couple of hours before testator's death in 1874; & an expert gave his opinion that the interlineation was written at the same time & with the same pen & ink as the will. The ct. granted probate of the will with the interlineation.—In the Goods of KING (1875), 23 W. R. 552.

1466. ——.]—Testator having obtained the lithographed form of a will by which the property was left to all the children absolutely on the death of the wife, filled up the blanks in his own handwriting, & in the place of the bequest to the children interlined the words "To my only son, A. No reference was made to the alterations in the attestation clause, nor were any initials placed in the margin to identify them. The surviving attesting witness had no knowledge whether the alterations were made at the time of execution. Testator had one child, a son, by the second wife, who took a life interest under the will, & five children by a previous marriage:—Held: the presumption arising from the ignorance of the witness was rebutted by a declaration of testator, made previous to the execution of the will, he intended to provide for the child of the second marriage & by the other circumstances of the case.—DENCH v. DENCH (1877), 2 P. This will remained in the custody of his solrs., & down to the time of his death testator frequently expressed his regret that he was not in a position to benefit his widow more largely. In 1888 he executed a second document in form of a will, which he inclosed in a sealed envelope with instructions that it was to be opened at the same time as his will. By it he left to a Mrs. B. certain house property which he had purchased out of his savings. No exors. were therein appointed & the printed revocation clause was struck through with a pencil:—Held: both documents were entitled to probate, & the second of them should not include the revocatory words.—In the Goods of TONGE (1891), 66 L. 1482. —— ——.]—Feme covert has a power of appointment by will or deed, she executes by both, & it does not appear which was prior, both were on the same day. By the deed she settles, on failure of issue of her & her husband, to such children of her sisters as shall be living at the death of her & her husband, or the longest liver, habendum to such children of her sisters as shall be living at her decease. The will devises to such children of her sisters as shall be living at her decease. A child born after her decease, & before her husband's. Question, whether he could take ? Determined, that if the deed was first, there being no power of revocation given ; therefore the will, quo ad hoc, would have no effect ; if the will was first, it being revocable in its nature, was revoked by the deed, if the deed was contrary : that the whole, therefore, would turn upon the effect of the deed ; & that by the deed, the child of the sister took ; the office of the habendum being to ascertain the quantity & quality of the estate, & not to destroy the premises.—COCHIN v. HEATHCOTE (1773), Lofft, 190 ; 98 E. Testator retained the deed in his own possession until his death, & did not communicate it either to the trustees or to A. & B. Testator, by his will, dated some years later than the deed, bequeathed all his property upon trust for the benefit of his wife, his said sons A. & B., & his legitimate children. After the death of testator the deed of covenant was found amongst his papers. A. survived testator & attained twenty-one :—Held : the deed was not of a testamentary nature, there being no power of revocation reserved to the covenantor.

In the cases referred to there has been a general reservation—or something like a reservation—of the party's right to deal with the property, notwithstanding the instrument ; & the cts. have held, that in such cases the instrument being one which was not to have effect until the death of the party . . . until then no conclusive effect could be given to it. 1485. —— —— Wholly or in part.]—A part only of a will may be revoked in the manner described, in other words, that the whole will is not necessarily revoked by the destruction of a part ; nevertheless I do not by any means intend to say that the destruction of a part may not, under certain circumstances, operate as a revocation of the entire will . . . "the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying" the instrument must be done with the intention to revoke. It is not the mere manual operation of tearing the instrument, or the act of throwing it into a fire, or of destroying it by other means, which will satisfy the requisites of the law ; the act must be accompanied with the intention of revoking ; there must be the animus as well as the act, both must concur in order to constitute a legal revocation. It is the animus, also, which must govern the extent & measure of operation to be attributed to the act, & determine whether the act shall effect the revocation of the whole instrument, or only of some, & what, portion thereof. . . . The intention of testator to revoke wholly, or in part, may . . . be proved by evidence of the expressed declaration of testator, especially if such declaration was contemporaneous with the act. . . . The intention may, in the absence of any express declaration, be inferred from the nature & extent of the act done by testator ; i.e. it may be inferred from the state & condition to which the instrument has been reduced by the act. . . . The intention may, in some degree at least, be inferred from extrinsic circumstances. There may have been declarations, not direct as to the revocation, but such as would lead to the inference, whether he did intend to revoke the will, or did not (SIR JOHN DODSON).—CLARKE v. SCRIPPS (1852), 2 Rob. SUB-SECT. 4.—REVOCATION BY MARRIAGE.

A. In General.

See Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ss. 18, 34.

1516. General rule.]—(1) By a deed of arrangement large real estates were vested in trustees upon trusts for sale, & payment of mtges. made by a husband, &, subject thereto, to pay the income to the wife for life ; & an absolute power was reserved to her to appoint by deed or will not only the surplus income, but also the real estates themselves. The husband subsequently deserted the wife, leaving her in possession of the estates, one of which was reserved for her occupation free of rent, so long as the interest on the mtges. was paid. The husband afterwards went to live with another woman ; & after a lapse of years the wife, by collusion with her husband, induced him to go to Scotland & commit adultery, to afford her an opportunity of obtaining a divorce there. During the negotiations she made her will & appointed the estates, together with the proceeds & income thereof, to P., a Frenchman, whom she knew before her marriage, his heirs & assigns. She obtained the divorce, & afterwards executed two deeds appointing the estates to P., his heirs & assigns, & then went through the ceremony of marriage with P. in Scotland & France. After her death, upon a suit by P., & upon another suit by a creditor of the husband who had become insolvent, the one to carry the deeds into effect, & the other to impeach the appointments both by deed & will :—Held : on P. submitting to carry out the trusts of the will, the will was not revoked by the deeds, as they contained no declaration to that effect.

(2) All those cases, in which it was formerly held that a will was revoked by an alteration of the estate of testator are now put an end to by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 23, & a will can only be revoked by marriage, by express declaration in writing, or by burning, etc. (ROMILLY, M.R.).—FORD v. DE PONTÈS, DE PONTÈS v. KENDALL (1861), 30 Beav. 572 ; 31 L. 1517. ——.]—Resp. & co-resp. in a divorce suit in India, in which a decree absolute was pronounced on Nov. 27, 1879, came to this country & were married on Feb. 3, 1880. On Feb. 6 co-resp. duly executed a will, by which he bequeathed all his property to his "reputed wife." On Apr. 2, 1880, the parties went through a second form of marriage :—Held : the first marriage, having been celebrated within six months from the date of the final decree of divorce, was invalid, & the will was revoked by the subsequent marriage.—WARTER v. WARTER (1890), 15 P. 1518. Application of rule—Independent of intention.]—The revocation of a will by the subsequent marriage of testator, & the birth of a child, is founded on a rule of law, altogether independent of any question of intention of testator, & consequently no evidence of testator's intention that his will should not be revoked, is admissible to rebut the presumption of law in favour of such revocation.—MARSTON v. ROE d. FOX, ROE d. FOX v. MARSTON (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 14 ; 2 Nev.

1511 i. —— Rebuttal of presumption.]—The presumption of revocation which arises on the non-production of a will may be rebutted by evidence as to the relationship between testator & wife, his words & actions subsequent to the execution of the will, & any evidence which may tend to rebut the presumption. The presumption is weakened where testator did not have the custody of the will.—UNWIN v. UNWIN, 20 B. C. R. 77.—CAN.

—Marriage & birth of a child do not afford presumptive evidence of intention to revoke, but are in themselves an absolute revocation of a will made previous to the marriage, but not in contemplation of it; the rule being that there is a tacit condition annexed to the will, that at the time of making it, it should not have effect, provided deceased have a wife, & child subsequently born.

Such tacit condition is applicable to a will of personal as well as real estate, & is annexed to it at the time of making the will, which speaks from that period, & not from testator's death.

Testator having made his will previous to his departure from England to Jamaica, devising his real estate to his brother, & his personal estate equally among his four sisters of the half blood, married soon after his arrival in the West Indies, when a settlement was made of the real, but which did not include the personal estate. Testator died without having revoked his will, leaving his wife enceinte, who was subsequently delivered of a posthumous child. The exor. in England obtained probate from the Prerogative ct. of Canterbury, & having sent out an exemplification of the letters of administration to Jamaica, probate was also granted there. A suit having been instituted to recall the probate, on the ground of the will being revoked by the marriage & birth of a child:—Held: such circumstances were an absolute revocation of the entire will.—ISRAELL v. RODON (1839), 2 Moo. 1520. Marriage must be lawful.]—A., a native of Marburg, came to England in 1822, aged thirteen, & remained here till his death in 1856, having made occasional visits to Germany. In 1835 he was married in this country to B., a native of Frankfort-on-the-Maine; in 1836 he obtained letters of naturalisation; in 1841 he made a will; in 1844 his wife died, leaving children, & in 1846 he married, at Frankfort, C., who was B.'s sister of the half-blood, & had children by her. On his death his brother took out letters of administration as the uncle & guardian of all the children, none of whom were of age, on the supposition that the will was revoked by the second marriage. The eldest son of the first marriage, on coming of age, called in the letters of administration, & set up the will:—Held: though, by the law of Frankfort, C.'s domicil, such a marriage would have been valid, yet the disability of either party to the contract would invalidate the marriage; the letters of administration must be revoked, & the probate of the will granted.—METTE v. METTE (1859), 1 Sw. & Tr. 416; 33 L. C. Will in Exercise of Power of Appointment.

1523. Whether revoked by second marriage—Same persons to take on default of appointment as on intestacy—Gift to persons on default of appointment otherwise than as next of kin—Gift to children.]—A. under his marriage settlement had, in the event of his surviving B., his wife, a power of appointing by deed or will amongst his children certain trust moneys, & in default of such appointment the moneys were to be equally divided amongst them. A. survived B., & by a will executed in 1847, he, being then a widower, amongst other things, directed the then unappointed portion of such moneys to be equally divided amongst his sons, a portion of such moneys having been previously assigned to his only daughter on her marriage. A., in 1855, contracted a second marriage, & died in 1858 without having executed any other will, or any further appointment of the trust moneys:—Held: the will of 1847, so far as it was an execution of the power of appointment, was not revoked by A.'s second marriage, though the same persons would take under the settlement in default of appointment, as would have taken in case of an intestacy under the Statute of Distributions.—In the Goods of FITZROY (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 133; 31 L. 1525. Property passing on default under settlement containing power.]—A will made in the exercise of a power of appointment is not revoked by a subsequent marriage, when in default of appointment the property of which it disposes passes under the settlement containing the power, although the same persons would take under such settlement as would have taken in case of intestacy under the Statute of Distributions. Nor is a will made in the exercise of a power of appointment revoked by a subsequent marriage, which in the event of certain contingencies happening, the property thereby appointed will not, in default of appointment, pass to the persons who would have taken in case of intestacy under the Statute of Distributions. A married woman executed a will in pursuance of a power therein recited, leaving all the property comprised in the power to her son. By a later will, containing no recital of a power, & no words of revocation, she left all her property to her son. She was possessed of property other than that appointed by the first will, on which the second will could operate. Both the wills were included in the probate, as together containing the last will of deceased.—In the Goods of FENWICK (1867), L. R. 1 P. & D. 319; 36 L. J. P. & M. 54; 16 L. T. 124; 31 J. P. 359.

1527. —— —— Property to pass to "next of kin" on default—Not next of kin according to Statutes of Distribution.]—By the will of A., a power was given to B. under certain circumstances to dispose by will of certain property, & in default of her appointment, the property was to devolve on the person or persons who, at her decease, should be her next of kin. B. in pursuance of such power, executed a will in favour of a person whom she afterwards married, but who died in her lifetime:—Held: the personal estate appointed by the will of B. would not, in default of such appointment have passed to the person entitled as her next of kin under the Statutes of Distribution; &, consequently, her will was not revoked by her subsequent marriage.—In the Goods of MCVICAR (1869), L. R. 1 P. & D. 671; 38 L. J. P. & M. 84; 20 L. T. 1013; 33 J. P. 678; 17 W. R. 832.

1528. Gift on default by general residuary clause.]—Testator, who died in 1895, gave a share in his residuary estate to trustees in trust to pay the income thereof to his daughter, Mrs. A., during her life, & to hold the share after her death, but only if she should so direct by will or codicil, in trust for such child or children of hers & in such manner as she should by will or codicil appoint. He also by his will declared that, subject as aforesaid, he left all his residuary estate "not hereby or hereunder" effectually disposed of in trust for his two other daughters. In 1917 Mrs. A. by her will appointed that the share bequeathed to her by her father's will should be held in trust for her son A. J. A. contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-five years. She was married for the second time in Apr. 1919, & died in July, 1919. A. J. A. was then eighteen or nineteen years old:—Held: the will, being made in exercise of a power of appointment when the property appointed would not in default of appointment pass to any of the persons specified in the bracketed part of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 18, was not revoked by the subsequent marriage.—Re PAUL, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. PEARCE, [1921] 2 Ch. 1; 90 L. 1530. —— ——.]—Testator by his will bequeathed all the real & personal estate to which he might be entitled at the time of his death, or over which he had power of appointment, to A. B., & appointed her his sole extrix. He subsequently married A. B., & died without making another will.

The property over which he had power of appointment under the will of his mother if he had not exercised it would have been divided among his brother & sisters:—Held: so much of the will as was in execution of the power of appointment came within the exception of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 18, & was not revoked by marriage, & administration with the will annexed might be granted to the widow, limited to the property over which testator had a power of appointment.—In the Goods of RUSSELL (1890), 15 P. D. 111; 59 L. J. P. 80; 62 L. T. 644.

1531. —— ——.]—P. made a will which exercised a general power of appointment in favour of his son, but in such a manner as to make the appointed fund part of his estate for payment of debts, & also disposed of his general estate. He afterwards married & died without having made a fresh will. It was admitted that by virtue of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 18, the will was revoked as to general estate, but was not revoked so far as it was an exercise of the power. Testator's son was a person of unsound mind not so found, & a receiver of his estate had been appointed in Lunacy. This action was brought by testator's widow, claiming administration. The son, who was his sole next of kin, was made deft. & appeared by the receiver. The receiver claimed that the administration should be granted to him for the use of the son:—Held: the grant must be made to the widow, but must be a general grant of administration with so much only of the will annexed as related to the appointed fund, not a grant of administration limited to the appointed fund.—In the Estate of POOLE, POOLE v. POOLE, [1919] P. 10; 88 L. not discovered until after testator's death, both wills having remained in his custody up to that time. The two wills were not inconsistent with each other, & the latter contained no express clause of revocation. Probate was granted of both documents upon parol evidence of the circumstances under which they were drawn up & executed, as together containing deceased's last will & testament.

1544. —— Question of intention.]—Deceased executed a will in 1858, by which she disposed of the whole of her property. In 1860 she executed another will, which commenced, "This is the last will & testament of me," etc. It varied & repeated various bequests given in the first will, appointed the same exors. for England as in that document, but contained no residuary nor revocatory clauses:—Held: from the general tenor of the last will, it was clear that testatrix did not intend the first will to remain in force, & it therefore was revoked.—DEMPSEY v. LAWSON (1877), 2 P. 1547. —— ——.]—In the earlier part of the will legacies are given to W. M. & three other persons, nephews of testator. Afterwards legacies are given to the same W. M. & to C. P. in the character of exors. of his will for their trouble therein. By the codicil testator revokes all legacies given to W. M. & the other three nephews, & this must according to the plain meaning of the words be held to be a revocation of all legacies which are by the will given to this person. But the matter does not rest here, for testator after appointing W. M. & C. P. trustees over the real estates appoints them also exors. of his will & gives them the legacies in question for their trouble therein. I cannot give these words any other construction than the plain apparent one, that the legacies are given to the exors. for their trouble as exors.; must therefore decide that the legacies are revoked by the codicil (LEACH, M.R.).—PERRY v. MEDDOWCROFT (1832), 2 L. J. Ch. 40.

1548. —— ——.]—A codicil contained the words, "Whereas I have by a former will & codicil, given to my late son, etc. I do hereby revoke such codicil." Testator made a codicil in these words:—"I likewise revoke that part of my last will & testament whereby I give, etc. (the houses in question) unto my son John & to his heirs; & my will is, that my daughters A. & E. should enjoy them, & I hereby give & bequeath the freehold ground & houses to my daughters A. & E. equally & jointly between them & to the survivor of them, & after their decease to their child or children equally, & if they should both die leaving no child or children, then the freeholds to go as ordered by my will."

The daughters, A. & E., died, leaving no child; John, the son, died in 1850, leaving a daughter, his only surviving child, one of the lessors of pltf., who was born in testator's lifetime & attained the required age. John had another daughter born in the testator's lifetime, & who married & had a son, but she & her son both died in the lifetime of John. Testator's third daughter, S., died leaving children, who were defts.:—Held: the codicil operated as a revocation, only so far as to effectuate the intention of testator to prefer A. & E. & their children, to John & his children, &, therefore, the lessors of pltf. were entitled to a moiety of the houses in question.

The general rule is that a revocation by subsequent will or codicil, whether by express words of revocation or demise inconsistent with the former devise, shall operate only so far as is necessary to effectuate intention of testator (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.).—DOE d. I do not see how the ct. can decree probate of any part of the former will in conjunction with the present will, containing, as the latter does, an express clause of revocation of all former wills. 1554. —— Some property undisposed of by subsequent will.]—Testatrix had a power of appointment under her marriage settlement. In 1857, she made a will in which, after referring to this power, she devised all her property to her husband. In 1863 she made a second will in which she also referred to the power. It varied the bequests of the first will, but it left undisposed of all her household furniture & effects, & it concluded thus: "I revoke all former wills by me heretofore made." The ct. refused to grant probate of both wills as together constituting the last will of deceased, but granted probate of the last will alone.—In the Goods of EUSTACE (1874), L. 1555. —— Words of revocation introduced in error—Probate granted without revocation clause.]—Deceased by her will left a portion of her furniture & household effects to her daughter, & disposed of the residue of her property, appointing trustees & exors. Subsequently she was advised that the bequest to her daughter should be secured to her separate use, & she gave directions that a testamentary paper should be prepared to that effect. The paper thus prepared purported to be her last will & testament, & in addition to a clause to the effect above-mentioned, contained one revocatory of all former wills. This paper was executed by deceased, but was not read over to or by her, & she was not aware that it contained such words of revocation:—Held: as the words of revocation had been introduced per incuriam & without the instructions of deceased, & their presence there was unknown to deceased when she executed the will, they ought to be omitted from the probate.—In the Goods of OSWALD (1874), L. 1556. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix by her will constituted her illegitimate son her universal legatee & one of her exors. After the execution of the will & shortly before her death, she expressed a wish to bequeath part of her furniture & other personal effects to her sister, her sole next of kin & heiress-at-law, & proceeded to write out a bequest giving effect to such wish on a printed form of will, which was duly executed. The form commenced by a clause of revocation; but testatrix did not fill up the blanks in this part of the form; & the clause was not read over to her at the time of execution, though the rest of the will was, & there was no evidence that she knew of such clause:—Held: under the circumstances, probate might be granted of the paper, omitting the clause of revocation, as a codicil to the original will.—In the Goods of MOORE, [1892] P. 378; 62 L. 1557. —— —— ——.]—Testator executed a will drawn by a lawyer, disposing of his real estate, but leaving some personal property undisposed of. He expressed an intention of disposing of the latter by a future instrument. Subsequently he bought a printed form, &, without legal advice, disposed of his personal property, inserting a clause revoking all former dispositions:—Held: the second document was intended to be supplemental to the prior one, the revocatory clause did not represent testator's wishes, & both documents would be admitted to probate, the revocatory clause in the second being omitted.—MARKLEW v. TURNER (1900), 17 T. L. R. 10.

1558. —— —— Knowledge of testatrix that words included.]—Testatrix left two wills, & a codicil to the first will. The second will, which disposed only of a small policy of insurance on her life, was prepared for her on a printed form by one of her exors. The form commenced with a clause revoking all previous testamentary dispositions; but when this was read over to her she objected to it, saying that she did not wish to revoke her first will & codicil. The person who prepared the will assured her that as it only related to the insurance policy the words of revocation would not apply to her former testamentary dispositions, & that to make an erasure might invalidate the will. Being satisfied by this assurance testatrix duly executed the will:—Held: testatrix must be taken to have known & approved of these words of revocation, & they must be included in the probate of the last will.—COLLINS v. ELSTONE,

In a subsequent part of his will he appointed the same individuals exors. In a codicil to his will, after stating that he had appointed R. B. one of the trustees under his will, he continued, " It is my will & desire to substitute in his stead & place R. T. Now I do hereby, by this my codicil, nominate & appoint the said R. T. to be one of the trustees of my said will & codicils in the place & stead of the said R. B., to act with & in conjunction with the said E. W. : & I hereby give the said R. 1569. Extent of revocation—Specific devise] —Devise of real estates to trustees & their heirs, upon trust to convey upon certain trusts ; &, subject thereto, to several natural sons successively in strict settlement. Testator also gave the residue of his personal estate upon trust to be laid out in land, to be settled to the same uses, etc. A codicil revoking so much of the will as directed the settlement of his said estate upon his sons, & varying the order of the limitations, was considered as confined to that object, operating by way of substitution only, not as a revocation of the devise ; & therefore extending to the estates to be purchased with the personal estate.—CARRINGTON (LORD) v. PAYNE (1800), 5 Ves. 404 ; 31 E. 1570. —— ——.]—Testator by his will, devised to trustees & their heirs, all his freehold & copyhold land at S. & also his freehold land at H. in case there should be but one son of his daughter A. who should attain the age of twenty-one years, upon trust for such son & his heirs ; & in case there should be two or more sons of A. who should attain the age of twenty-one years, then in trust for the second of such sons & his heirs ; & in case there should be no son of A. upon trust for such of the daughters of A., if any, as should first attain the age of twenty-one years, etc. : & then after certain bequests of stock in trust, to pay the dividends by way of life annuities, testator devised & bequeathed all the residue of his property, whether freehold, copyhold, or for years, money in the funds, upon mtge. or otherwise, upon security or at interest, debts of whatever other nature or kind, to the same trustees, their heirs, exors., & administrators, upon trust, to sell, get in, etc., & to apply the proceeds in payment of debts & legacies, etc. ; & as to the residue of the moneys to arise by such sales, to invest the same in the public funds or real securities ; & if there should be only one child of A. upon trust, to transfer or assure the funds, & the dividends, interest, & annual proceeds thereof, to such only child, at or on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, etc. ; & if there should be two or three children of A. in trust for such two or three children equally to be divided between them, the shares of sons to be transferred on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, etc.

Testator afterwards made a codicil to his will in these words, to the effect following :—" Having some short time back drawn my pen through the first fifteen lines of the sixth sheet of my will, & being apprehensive that such rasure not being witnessed, might lead to litigation, I declare that the sole intention of such rasure is, to revoke that part only of the will, whereby I direct the sale of my freehold property, & I hereby direct & appoint, that, the son of my daughter A. who shall first attain the age of twenty-one years, shall on attaining that age change his name to Elwes ; & I give & devise to the son of A. on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, & changing his name to Elwes, all my freehold property, lands, tenements, & hereditaments, to hold to my said grandson, his heirs, & assigns, etc. ; & I do hereby ratify & confirm the said will, except as before in excepted " :—Held : the will was revoked by the codicil, expressly as to the power of sale ; & as to the corpus of the lands, at S. & H. by the effect of inconsistency of devise, but the will was unrevoked & operative in all other respects.—DUFFIELD v. DUFFIELD (1829), 3 Bli. 1571. —— ——.]—By will testator gave seven cottages specifically described, together with other property, also specifically described. By a codicil he recited the gift by the will, referring in terms to the property described, other than the seven cottages ; he then revoked the gift of the property described in the recital, & gave the property " included in the hereinbefore-mentioned devise " in a different manner & upon other trusts :—Held : the gift of the seven cottages was not revoked, but they passed under the devise, upon the trusts named in the devise.—HINCHCLIFFE v. HINCHCLIFFE (1861), 2 Drew. & Sm. 96 ; 5 L. 1573. —— ——.]—Testator, whose family consisted of two legitimate sons, an illegitimate son, pltf., & daughter, in 1801 devised his estate W. to his elder son, & his children in strict settlement, remainder to his younger son & his children also in strict settlement, remainder to pltf. for life, remainder to A. T. in fee; & devised his estate H. to similar uses, but preferring the younger son & his children to the elder. The estate W. was charged with certain annuities, including one of £21, to pltf. He also bequeathed legacies to several persons, & the residue of his personalty to his two legitimate sons. In 1806 the elder son died without issue, & in 1818 A. T., the remainderman, also died. In 1819 testator by an instrument duly executed & attested, which he thereby declared "to be a codicil to be added to, & to be taken as part of" his will, gave to pltf. "a further sum of £21 annually, in addition to the £21 left to him by his will," & gave certain legacies to other persons; & gave to his surviving legitimate son "all his estate & property of every description whatever, after discharging the above legacies." The surviving legitimate son died without issue, & pltf. brought ejectment against his devisees, for the estate H., claiming as tenant for life under the will:—Held: the intention to revoke by the codicil, the devise of the estate to pltf., was not equally clear with the original intention to devise; &, according to the principle laid down in Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks, No. 1671, post, the devise was not revoked by the codicil.—ROBERTSON v. POWELL (1863), 2 H. & C. 762; 3 New Rep. 433; 33 L. 1574. —— ——.]—By clause 8 of his will dated June 24, 1871, testator devised "all my farms & lands in the parish of Bedwas" upon certain settled trusts. By clause 14 he gave his residuary real & personal estate upon certain residuary trusts. By a codicil dated Feb. 13, 1873, testator, after reciting that he had lately purchased farm A. in the parish of B., thereby gave farm A. to his daughter for life, & at her death to his grandson J. & the heirs of his body, but with no ultimate disposition of the fee simple. Testator died on May 31, 1873. His grandson, J., died on Jan. 21, 1883, an infant without issue. Testator's daughter died on Feb. 20, 1927:—Held: the fee simple in farm A. being undisposed of by the codicil passed, not under the general residuary devise in clause 14, but under the devise of "all my farms" in B. in clause 8, which devise was unrevoked by the codicil as regards the fee simple.—Re DAVIES, THOMAS v. THOMAS-DAVIES, [1928] Ch. 24; 97 L. 1575. —— —— Omission of trust in confirmation of original devise.]—Codicil, reciting a specific & limited purpose, revokes the whole devise, declaring the trusts again, with the proposed alteration, & confirms the will in every particular not thereby altered or revoked. By a codicil he did not repeat this power of advancement, but altered some of the trusts relating to the fund to which the power of advancement applied, & confirmed his will generally:—Held: the codicil did not revoke the will as to the power of advancement.—HILL v. WALKER (1858), 4 K. & J. 166; 32 L. 1577. Effect on limitations.]
Testator, by his will, devised his messuages, tenements, etc., called Penty Park, to J. L. for life, with remainders to his first & other sons in tail: & he devised his messuage, tenement & lands, known by the name of Coedllys, to J. P. for life, with remainders to his first & other sons in tail: & in the subsequent parts of his will he mentioned the estates as his Penty Park & Coedllys estates. By a codicil, after reciting that he had given the Penty Park estate to J. L., he revoked the Penty Park estate & gave it to J. P.; & after further reciting that he had given the Coedllys estate, in his will, to J. P., he revoked the bequest & gave the Coedllys estates to J. L.:—Held: all the limitations in the will of the two estates, were revoked, & J. P. took Penty Park in fee, & J. L. Coedllys in fee.—PHILIPPS v. ALLEN (1835), 7 Sim. 446; 58 E. R. 909.

1578. Expression in codicil against beneficial interest.]—Devise to the children of A.:—Held: not to be revoked, by an expression in a codicil that they were not intended to take any beneficial interest under the will or codicil.

Testator devised his real estate to his brother W. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail, with remainders over; & he bequeathed his residuary personal estate between his nephews & nieces. By a codicil, he revoked his will, so far only as it was altered by the codicil, & he gave to his nephews & nieces, except, as he said, his brother W.'s children, "who are not intended to take any beneficial interest under his will or this codicil," £1,000 each:—Held: the devise to the children of W. was not revoked.—CLEOBUREY v. BECKETT, CLEOBUREY v. TURNER (1851), 14 Beav. 583; 51 E. 1579. —— —— Effect on bequest of money to same uses.]—Testator devised freeholds in Dorsetshire upon certain trusts, & bequeathed £3,000 to his trustees to purchase lands in Dorsetshire to be held upon the same trusts. By a codicil he revoked the devise of his freeholds, & declared other trusts without alluding to the £3,000:—Held: there was no implied revocation of the bequest of £3,000, which would pass under the will as if no codicil had been made.—BRIDGES v. STRACHAN (1878), 8 Ch. D. 558; 38 L. T. 502; 26 W. R. 691.

1580. Life interest—Effect on interest in remainder.]—Devise & bequest of real & personal estate to a person for life, with limitations over. By a codicil, reciting the devise & bequest, & also the limitations over, the devise & bequest were revoked, "so far as related to the tenant for life"; but "estates" both real & personal, out of which the interest of the tenant for life was carved, were directed to sink into the residue:—Held: this was a revocation of the interest of the tenant for life only.—IVES v. IVES (1840), 4 Y. & C. 1582. ——— Pecuniary bequest.] — Testator directed his trustees to invest such a sum as would produce £40 a year, & to pay same to his daughter, &, after her death, to transfer the fund to his residuary legatees: & he gave £100 to his daughter absolutely. By a codicil he revoked the sum of £1,200 given to his daughter for her life, & gave her £500 in lieu thereof:—Held: as the £40 a year was the only sum given to the daughter for her life, it was revoked by the codicil.—PILCHER v. HOLE (1834), 7 Sim. 208; 4 L. 1583. ——— ———.]—Testatrix bequeathed a legacy to A. for life, with remainder to his children; by a codicil, she revoked all gifts to A. & his children, except B., to whom she gave £400. Testatrix subsequently, in a letter to B., which was proved as testamentary, said "I cut A. & his children off from every bequest I have formerly given to him or them":—Held: the gift to B., though one of A.'s children, was not revoked.—MILES v. ALLEN (1836), 5 L. J. Ch. 111.

1584. ——— ———.]—Revocation by codicil of all the gifts to A. named in the will:—Held: to extend to A.'s interest under a gift to a class of which A. might form one.—COTTERELL v. SANDERSON (1837), 1 Jur. 471.

1585. ——— ———.]—Testatrix by will bequeathed £3,000 in trust for C. for life for her separate use, & after her death for her children; & in case there should be no such children, in trust for P. By a codicil, stating that C. had been largely provided for from other sources, testatrix deducted the sum of £2,000 from the legacy of £3,000, & revoked so much of the legacy accordingly, leaving C. £100 only as a remembrance of her affection:—Held: the legacy of £3,000 was revoked in toto, & in lieu of it the legacy of £100 was given for the absolute benefit of C.; & P. took no interest either in the £100 or any part of the £3,000.—SANFORD v. SANFORD (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 67; 8 L. 1586. ——— ———.]—Testatrix by her will gives a legacy of £500 to be invested, & the annual produce paid to E. H. for life, & after her death to J. H. absolutely. Testatrix then makes five codicils, by some of which she gives several legacies of the same amount to the same persons, as she has previously given by other codicils anterior in date, expressing in other instances of legacies given; that those legacies were in addition to those already given, but not using the words "in addition to" where she gives the same sums to the same persons as before, in a former codicil. E. H. dies before testatrix, who, after the death of E. H., by a codicil to her will, declares that she revokes the legacy of £100 given to J. H. Evidence is adduced to show that testatrix intended to cancel two of the codicils, supported by the fact that she calls her fourth codicil her third codicil, & also that she promised to settle £400 on J. H.:—Held: the codicils being all admitted to probate, the legacies given twice over were cumulative & not substitutionary, & the revocation of the legacy of £100 meant to revoke the legacy of £500 to the extent of £100 only, & therefore J. H. was entitled to £400.—THURNALL v. RAYNER (1856), 4 W. R. 404.

1587. ——— ———.]—Testator gave £4,000 to his exors. upon trust, with the concurrence of his sister, to settle it by deed, on trust to provide "stipends & annuities" for indigent persons, not exceeding nine. The deed was also to regulate the management, etc., of the "institution." He also devised nine freehold houses to his sister, suggesting to her, but without imposing any obligation, "legal, equitable or moral," that they might be converted into almshouses for the recipients of the income of the legacy. By a codicil, he revoked such parts of his will, "as related to the building of certain almshouses," there was none, & released his exors. "from carrying out the same & the stipends & annuities connected therewith":—Held: the charitable gift was valid; & had been revoked by the codicil.—BALDWIN v. BALDWIN (No. 1) (1856), 22 Beav. 413; 26 L. By a codicil referring to the said bequests, & to the fact that since the said will he had made a provision for his daughter E., a settlement of £8,000, & stating that he intended such to be taken in lieu & satisfaction of the two legacies of £1,500 & £6,500, testator "revoked & made void the said legacies of £1,500 & £6,500 in & by his said will given & bequeathed to or for the benefit of his said daughter E. & otherwise as in the said will is

By a codicil he directed his trustees to stand possessed of the other half of his residuary estate, subject to further life interest therein, upon the like trusts as were declared in his will of the first half thereof. By a second codicil he revoked the legacies of £1,000 each given to nine of the ten institutions mentioned in his will, & in all other respects confirmed his will as altered by the former codicil thereto :—Held : there was no revocation in terms of the bequest of shares of the residuary estate to the nine institutions, nor was there any implied revocation of such shares, but the ct. should, if possible, find a construction which would leave the residuary bequest intact; either the words in the residuary bequest could be read as a covenient way of showing the proportions intended, or " respective legacies " could be read as " respective legacies as hereinbefore named," & on either construction the nine institutions took proportionate shares of the residuary estate.—Re FLORENCE, LYDALL v. HABERDASHERS' CO. One of the children having died in testator's lifetime, he made a codicil to his will, by which, after reciting the gift of £6,000 to have been intended as a provision for his widow, & to enable her to support the infants he revoked " the said legacy," & bequeathed to his trustees the sum of £4,000, the income of which he directed to be paid to his wife for the support of herself & the surviving infant child :—Held : the revocation by the codicil of the £6,000 given by the will, was confined to the income of the widow, & the gift of the corpus of the £6,000 was not affected by the codicil.—STOCKS v. HAMMOND (1863), 2 New Rep. 307.

J. T. & W. T. F., their exors., administrators, & assigns, on trust, out of the rents & profits from time to time to grow due from the said premises, to pay the annuities therein mentioned, &, subject to the several annuities, upon trust to pay the rents & profits of the said leaseholds, or the surplus thereof, after answering the same several annuities, or such of them as should then be subsisting, to his niece S. C. F., & her husband W. T. F., & the survivor of them, during their lives & the life of the survivor of them, & after the decease of the survivor of them W. T. F. & S. C. F., his wife, to stand possessed of the said premises upon the trusts therein mentioned, for the benefit of the children of S. C. F. by her husband W. T. F., with remainder over in default of children who should become entitled ; & she appointed W. T. F. & J. J. F. exors. of her will. Testatrix afterwards, by a codicil, after reciting, that, by her will, she had bequeathed to her exor. W. T. F. the whole of her leasehold estates at N., revoked so much of the bequest as related to the whole of such leasehold estates so given & bequeathed to W. T. F., his heirs & successors, & gave & bequeathed to him one-half part only, & the other half part of the said leasehold estates she thereby gave & bequeathed to her cousin C. L. H. her, or one of her, exors., & in all other respects she confirmed her will :—Held : the codicil amounted to a revocation not merely of W. T. F.'s interest under the will in a moiety of the leaseholds at N. but to an absolute revocation of the bequest of a moiety thereof, subject to the charges imposed thereon by the will ; & C. L. 1596. —— ——.]—Testator by his will bequeathed his personal estate to his two daughters A. & B. equally.

By a codicil he directed that "instead of such bequests in the manner expressed in my said will to such daughters absolutely" his exors. should stand possessed of his personal estate upon trust for sale & conversion, & to pay the income in moieties to his two daughters for life & on the death of either of them to pay the moiety of the trust moneys to their children as they should by deed or will appoint. The codicil contained no gift over in the event of a daughter dying without issue.

B. died without ever having had any issue, having by her will devised & bequeathed all her real & personal estate to her exors., upon the trusts therein mentioned :—Held : there was no intestacy as to the moiety of the personal estate given to B., there being no revocation under the codicil of the absolute gift given to her by the will.

Undoubtedly by the will that share is given to her absolutely, & the question is whether that gift is revoked by the codicil beyond what is necessary to give effect to the special provisions of that codicil. . . . He also gave the trustees a discretionary power to give the fund to his son, discharged of all the trusts. By a codicil, testator revoked the power given to the son, & directed that after the son's decease, & on failure of issue, the fund should go to the son's wife for life, & after her decease, form part of testator's residuary estate :—Held : the discretionary power given by the will to the trustees was not revoked by the codicil.—BUTLER v. GREENWOOD (1856), 22 Beav. 303 ; 52 E. The brother died ; & testator afterwards made a codicil, by which, after reciting that in case his son should die without an heir, male or female, he had bequeathed his estates in the parish of M. & elsewhere, to R., he revoked that part of his will, & excluded R. from all chance of benefit under the will, & in the place of R., he, if his son should die without heirs male or female, bequeathed all the estates he had or might have at the time of his death, in M. or elsewhere, which by virtue of his will were the sole property of his son, to T., & the heirs of his body, subject to the same conditions of entail as were imposed on the son ; & in case T. died without heirs, he bequeathed all the estates which T. would inherit by the death of testator's son, to J. & his heirs, subject to the payment of testator's debts & annuities :—Held : the gift of the residue of the personal estate to R. was revoked, & this residue was not undisposed of, but was given to T.—READ v. BACKHOUSE (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 546 ; 39 E. Now can I in the face of the written declarations of testator, that the will of 1838 is "his last will," say that it is not; which I should, in effect, do, were I to hold that the paper of 1837 is to be taken conjointly with it. 1610 i. Effect of words "last will"—Whether former wills revoked—Question of intention.]—Where a later will does not expressly revoke an earlier one, & the two may stand together in several important matters, it lies on the party impunging the earlier will to prove the intention of testator to revoke it by the later; & in deciding such a question, conjecture or slight probabilities are not sufficient, & the words "this is my last will" are not entitled to any weight whatever.—LESLIE v. LESLIE (1872), 6 I. 1613. —— —— ——.]—If a subsequent testamentary paper is only partly inconsistent with one of an earlier date, the latter instrument is only revoked as to those parts where it is inconsistent, & both of the papers are entitled to probate.

Where there are two testamentary papers, each professing in form to be the last will of deceased, the ct. in determining whether one or both are entitled to probate must be guided by the consideration, not whether testator intended them both together to form his will, but what dispositions of his property he designed to revoke or to retain.

In 1852, he executed another testamentary paper, the contents of which were wholly unknown, except the circumstance of the paper commencing with the words, "This is the last will & testament." This latter instrument was not forthcoming at his death, but there was no evidence of its destruction :—Held : (1) the onus probandi lies upon the party setting up the subsequent instrument as a revocation of the former will ; (2) to establish a revocation of a former will relating to personalty, by a subsequent testamentary paper not forthcoming, by parol evidence of execution only ; in the absence of any draft or instructions for such instrument, such evidence must be strong & conclusive as to its contents ; (3) the mere fact of such an instrument commencing with the words, "This is my last will & testament," does not render it a revocatory instrument ; as those words do not necessarily import that such instrument contained a different disposition of the property ; & to make it operate as a revocation of a former will, it must be proved that the contents of the latter instrument were different from the former ; (4) a subsequent will, the contents of which were unknown, having remained in the custody of deceased & not forthcoming, the presumption of law was, that it was destroyed by him animo revocandi, & did not revoke a prior will uncancelled.—CUTTO v. GILBERT (1854), 9 Moo. 1620. —— ——.]—Testator, by birth a British subject, but domiciled in Spain at his death, executed a will in England, & subsequently several codicils valid by the law of Spain. Lastly, he executed a paper in England which confirmed the English will in whatever it did not clash or interfere with the contents of the codicil, which was to be considered as his last & deliberate will :—Held : the Spanish codicils were not revoked by the last-mentioned paper, but, as forming part of the will which did not clash with such paper, were confirmed by it.

Nor does the fact that testator speaks of his English codicil as his "last & deliberate will" affect the earlier codicils (SIR J. HANNEN).—In the Goods of DE LA SAUSSAYE (1873), L. R. 3 P. & D. 42 ; 42 L. J. P. & M. 47 ; 28 L. T. 368 ; 37 J. P. 312 ; 21 W. R. 549.

1621. —— ——.]—Testator executed a will on Sept. 8, 1866, & on Feb. 21, 1871, added a codicil thereto. The will was subsequently destroyed by his wife, by his direction, but not in his presence. On Sept. 29, 1872, he executed the following codicil : "I desire to cancel the will that I made in 1866, & that the will that I made on Oct. 17, 1855, with the codicil dated Feb. 21, 1871, shall stand as my last will & testament." The document which he executed on Oct. 17, 1855, was a marriage settlement & not a will:—Held: the will of Sept. 8, 1866, was sufficiently identified by the reference in the second codicil, that its revocation was not dependent on the validity as a testamentary paper of the settlement, & the will was therefore absolutely revoked.—In the Goods of GENTRY (1873), L. 1622. —— ——.]—Deceased executed a will, in which, after disposing in legacies of a small part of her property, she left the rest to her daughter absolutely, & she appointed her extrix. She subsequently executed another instrument, which purported to be her last will & testament, but had no revocatory clause. By this she gave the whole of her property to her daughter for life, & made her whole & sole extrix. On the death of the daughter she gave legacies to a larger amount than in the first will, but did not dispose of the residue:—Held: the two instruments ought to be admitted to probate as together containing the will of the deceased.

Where there are two instruments, the later of which in date, purporting to be the last will, does not contain words of absolute revocation, it is a question of construction whether or not it revokes the former (SIR J. 1624. —— ——.]—Testator in 1898 executed a will disposing of all his property & appointing his daughter extrix.

In 1903 he duly executed a document on a printed form, commencing "This is the last & only will of me," whereby he bequeathed the proceeds of an insurance policy & appointed an exor.

In 1905 he duly executed a further document, described as "a codicil to the last will," whereby he made certain bequests & appointed other exors.:—Held: the words "last & only" in the intermediate document did not preclude the admission to probate of all three documents.

1625. Effect of subsequent inconsistent will or codicil.]—Testatrix by codicil gave to A. the legacy given by her will to the children of B. "as I know not whether any of them are alive & if they are well provided for": though they are living, B. is entitled; the construction being that if they are living, they are well provided for.

The next question is, whether their codicil is at all events a substitution: & upon reading it with some attention it is impossible to say it is not a complete revocation of that legacy. It is an absolute gift of the legacy designed for B.'s children: & the reason accompanies it (LORD ALVANLEY, M.R).—A.-G. v. WARD (1797), 3 Ves. 327; 30 E. R. 1036

1631. ——.]—Testator, by will, distributed £7,300 stock amongst several legatees, except £200, surplus of the stock, which he directed to be applied in defraying any necessary expenses. By a codicil, dated two years after the will, at which time there was, by reason of certain erasures made in his will, a much larger surplus than £200 stock, he left "the surplus of his money in the funds" to be appropriated as his exors. might think proper among the several legatees. By a subsequent codicil, dated a few days after the former, testator, after bequeathing certain snuff boxes, etc., & stating that there appeared "a surplus remaining after the legacies aforesaid were paid," begged his exor. to distribute the same among the children of his son W. There was property of inconsiderable amount besides stock, to which the residuary bequest, contained in the last codicil, might be applied:—Held: that bequest did not operate as a revocation of the bequest of the surplus of the funds contained in the second codicil.—INGLEFIELD v. COGHLAN (1845), 2 Coll. 247; 63 E. By a codicil, he bequeathed an annuity & gave all his property, in houses or in the funds, or of any other sort not disposed of by his will, & which had accumulated since the making thereof, in trust for the married woman & three other legatees, equally to be divided amongst them. There was, at testator's death, no description of property not disposed of by his will or accumulated since:—Held: the beneficial title to testator's property was not affected by the codicil, unless in the event of the married woman's death without having fully exercised her power, & without leaving any person of her blood & kindred living at her death.—LEE v. DELANE (1850), 4 De G. & Sm. 1; 16 L. By a codicil testator appointed the said A. & D. exors., revoked previous appointments, & directed his exors. to sell & dispose of his estate at Worcester Park:—Held: the codicil did not deprive F. 1645. ——.]—Testator executed a will of 1885, & two codicils of 1890 & 1892 respectively. These documents were found, each in a separate envelope, at his bankers after his death. The codicil of 1892 contained no revocation clause. After the death of testator, there was found at his residence an altered copy of the codicil of 1890, which had served as a draft of the later codicil. Between the dates of the codicils testator's property had largely increased in value. The benefits conferred by the later codicil were larger in amount than those mentioned in the earlier codicil; but the same class of persons were benefited in both documents, the terms of which were almost identical, & contained almost identically the same powers, provisions & limitations. On the draft testator had written an indorsement which made it quite clear that he thought & intended the second codicil to be in substitution for the first:—Held: evidence of surrounding circumstances was admissible; &, upon that evidence, taken in connection with the documents themselves, the later codicils must be taken to be in substitution for the former.—WAINEWRIGHT v. WAINEWRIGHT (1894), 71 L. 1647. ——.]—A later will may revoke earlier testamentary documents, although the earlier documents may have disposed of the whole estate of deceased, & although the last document contain no express clause of revocation & leave the residue undisposed of.

The intention of testator or testatrix is to be gathered from a consideration of the substance, & not merely the form of the testamentary documents.

If the intention remain in doubt upon the face of the documents themselves, extrinsic evidence of the surrounding circumstances may be admitted to place the ct., as far as may be, in the position of testator or testatrix at the time when the last document was executed.—In the estate of BRYAN, [1907] P. 125 ; 76 L. J. P. 30 ; 96 L. T. 584.

1648. —— Second will dealing with entire property.]—Testatrix, having made a formal will, subsequently executed a holograph will, which did not contain residuary or revocation clauses, nor any powers for the administration of the estate, such as the first will did :—Held : as the second will disposed of all the property of testatrix, it was to be taken to be in substitution for, & must be admitted to probate in exclusion of the first will.—In the Goods of TURNOUR (1886), 56 L. 1649. —— ——.]—A second testamentary document did not in terms revoke a prior will, but nevertheless dealt with the entire property of testator. Parol evidence was offered to prove that the second document was intended by testator as a codicil, but rejected on the ground that there was no such ambiguity in the second document as would render necessary an explanation by parol evidence :—Held : the second document, being unambiguous & dealing with the entire property of testator, must be admitted to probate as the true will.—In the Goods of PALMER, PALMER v. PEAT (1889), 58 L. 1650. —— ——.]—The father of testatrix left her the sum of £4,000 for life with power of appointment by will among her children. Testatrix made three wills, one in 1890, by which she left one of her daughters "the sum of £1,000, being the sum left to me by the will of my father" ; a second in 1894, by which she left the same daughter £4,000, & the residue of her property to the same daughter & one of her sons ; & a third in 1895, by which she left all her property to the same daughter :—Held : as the second & third wills both professed to deal with all the property of testatrix, the second will was revoked by the third, the general words of bequest in the third will did not revoke the execution of the limited power of appointment by the first will, & probate should, therefore, be granted of the first & third wills.—CADELL v. WILCOCKS, [1898] P. 21 ; 67 L. 1655. —— —— ——.]—Testator made a will, devising his real estate to his wife absolutely ; afterwards he executed another will, giving his real estate to trustees, upon trust after his wife's death, for the Bristol General Hospital, & he devised to his trustees all the residue of his real estate, & "the proceeds thereof, which by any law to the contrary might not by that will pass to the hospital, fully relying upon my trustees to carry out my wishes & desires." The gift to the hospital was void, & the trustees claimed to take the real estate beneficially under the ultimate gift. The ct. held that they did not take beneficially. Afterwards on the same day he made a formal will by which he exercised the power of appointment in favour of pltf.'s daughter, & left half of all his other real & personal estate to pltf. & the other half to pltf.'s wife, & appointed pltf. exor. On May 1, 1917, testator made a soldier's will, in which he said "I leave all I have" to deft. Testator died on May 17, 1917, & so far as was known he at that time possessed no real property :—Held : as no contrary intention appeared, the soldier's will operated as an execution of the general power of appointment & as a revocation of the appointment in the first will, but, as testator died before the passing of Wills (Soldiers & Sailors) Act, 1918 (c. 58), & therefore had no power by a soldier's will to dispose of real estate the, earlier will, which did dispose of real estate, was not revoked in toto, & both wills must be admitted to probate.—NIXON v. PRINCE (1918), 34 T. 1662. —— Subsequent gift void for remoteness.]—Testator devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife for life & after her decease in trust for his children as therein mentioned, & if there should be no such child then testator gave to his wife a power of appointment among the children of his brothers & sisters, & in default of appointment he gave the residuary trust funds to all the children of his brothers & sisters. By a codicil to his will testator, after declaring that the life interest given to his wife by his will should be determinable on her remarriage unless such remarriage should be with a natural-born British subject, revoked the power of appointment given to his wife & declared that after her death his trustees should stand possessed of his residuary trust funds in trust for all or any of the children or child of his brothers & sisters who should be living at the death of his wife or born at any time afterwards before any one of such children for the time being in existence attained a vested interest & who being a son or sons attained the age of twenty-one years or being a daughter or daughters attained that age or married, if more than one in equal shares. Testator died without issue & left personal estate only. At the date of his will his father & mother, both of whom survived him, were both aged sixty-six years. The father had subsequently died. 1663. Two wills of same date.]—(1) If a will be made, & afterwards another will, without cancelling the former, & either will is proved to be confirmed after the other will, the whole estate comprised in the will so last confirmed will go according to the limitations in that will.

(2) If there are two inconsistent wills of the same date, neither of which can be proved to be last executed, they are both void by the common law for uncertainty, & will let in the heir-at-law ; unless such wills are explained by some subsequent act of testator, so as to reconcile such inconsistency.

(3) If two wills appear & the limitations in both are consistent, & they have both been confirmed by various codicils, the wills & codicils may all be taken as one testamentary disposition, & such construction made as that the limitations in both wills shall take place, to the disinherison of the heir-at-law.—PHIPPS v. ANGLESEY (EARL) (1751), 7 Bro. 1664. ——.]—Primâ facie, every document purporting to be testamentary & executed in accordance with the provisions of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), ought to be admitted to probate. This presumption may be displaced where there is more than one document if there is a sequence in the dates of the documents which, coupled with the words of the later, leads to the inference that the later was meant to be a revocation in whole or in part of the earlier, or if the documents are proved to have been executed on the same date & occasion, or are undated, & it is impossible to say which was executed first, & they are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together.

Where, however, two testamentary documents are duly executed on the same day & occasion, & practically simultaneously, & the circumstances are such as to lead to the inference that they were both intended to be effective, then though there are apparent inconsistencies both will be admitted to probate, unless they are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together; & in determining that question the ct. will, so far as possible, read the words of the documents so as to support the admissibility of both to probate, even though the construction should be one which the ct. would not have otherwise arrived at.—TOWNSEND v. MOORE, [1905] P. 66; 74 L. 1672. .]—Testator, by his will, gave all his property to his wife absolutely. By a subsequent incomplete testamentary paper, he gave all his property to his wife & two other persons, in trust to sell & pay the interest of the proceeds to his wife for her life, &, after her decease, to dispose of the principal to the purposes after mentioned. Testator then gave several legacies & annuities, & directed that, after the death & failure of issue of one of the annuitants, the annuity should be paid to his residuary legatee, but he did not name any. In another testamentary paper testator gave legacies & annuities to the legatees & annuitants named in the former paper, & also to other persons:—Held: the three papers formed, together, testator's will; the bequest to the wife in the first paper was not revoked except so far as was necessary to provide for the legacies & annuities; & the legacies given by the second & third papers were single & not cumulative.—BRINE v. FERRIER (1835), 7 Sim. 549; 58 E. 1673. —.]—Testator, by his will, gave his real estates to his wife for life, &, after her death, he directed them to be sold, & one moiety of the proceeds to be paid to his wife's relations as she should appoint, &, in default of appointment, to her next of kin, & the other moiety to his own next of kin. By a codicil he expressed his will that his real estate should be sold at any time, either before or after his wife's death. The interest of the share bequeathed to his own relations after his wife's death to be paid to her, & the other moiety devised by his will to be paid to his wife for her own use:—Held: the power of appointment given by the will was revoked by the codicil, & the wife took an absolute interest in one moiety of the proceeds of testator's real estate.—ANKERS v. SANDFORD (1840), 4 Jur. 817.

1674. —.]—Y. by his will, after giving several legacies, gives the residue of his estate to trustees, in trust to pay the income to his wife for life, & after her death to transfer the residue to D. By a codicil, after giving specific & pecuniary legacies, there is the following clause: "All the rest & residue of my property not hereinbefore, or by my will or any other codicil, disposed of, I give & bequeath to my nephew C., & to D., their exors., administrators, & assigns, after the death of my wife, equally to be divided between them":—Held: the residue of testator's property passed under the residuary clause of the codicil, & revoked the gift of the residue bequeathed by the will.—HARDWICKE (EARL) v. DOUGLAS (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 795; West, 555; 9 E. 1675. .]—Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his daughter upon trust for her maintenance & support, until she attained twenty-one, or married with the consent of his trustees under that age, & upon her attaining such age or her marriage, for her separate use, with remainder to her children; & in case of her death without issue, he bequeathed the same to certain legatees in remainder. Testator afterwards declared by a codicil, that, in consequence of a nervous debility, his daughter was unfit for the control of herself, & his will was that she should not marry, & in case of her marriage or death, he gave the property he had bequeathed to her over to the same legatees in remainder:—Held: the limitation over by the codicil, being in general restraint of marriage, was void as to the life-interest of the daughter.

1676. —.]—J. by his will, gave £20 to his son, & £5 a piece to such female servants as should be in his service at his decease. By a codicil to his will he gave his servant B. £2,000. He afterwards, by an incomplete testamentary paper, made before Jan. 1, 1838, which was admitted to probate, & which was a copy of his will, with some alterations, gave to his son £19 19*s.*, & to his servant B., if she should be in his service at his decease, £500. No other servant than B. was in his service at his decease:—Held: so far as the last testamentary paper extended, it revoked the will & codicils; & B. took only the £500 which was given to her by the last testamentary paper.—KIDD v. NORTH (1846), 2 Ph. 91; 16 L. 1678. —.] — Testator, having executed a codicil on July 23, on July, 30, executes another, totidem verbis, except the substitution of a clause & the addition of a legacy, intending, according to parol testimony, to supersede the former, but leaving it entire & unrevoked:—Held: both the papers were entitled to probate.—In the Goods of BEETSON (1848), 6 Notes of Cases, 13; 13 Jur. 844, n.

1679. —.]—Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his niece & appointed her extrix. By a codicil he appointed A. & B. his residuary legatees & exors.:—Held: though power to prove the will & codicil was reserved to the niece, the gift of the residue to her was wholly revoked.—EVANS v. EVANS (1849), 17 Sim. 86 ; 14 Jur. 383 ; 60 E. R. 1060.

By a codicil subsequently executed, he devised "all his real estates, of what nature or kind soever" to the son of B. in strict settlement ; & on failure of such issue, then he gave & devised "all his real estates in such manner as was in that behalf mentioned in his will, thereby declaring it to be his will that the devises thereinbefore made should take effect in precedence to the devises of his real estates contained in his will" :—Held : the words "real estate" appeared to have been used in the same sense both in the will & codicil, & they did not include "tithes" in either ; & consequently the specific devise of "tithes" in the will was not revoked by the codicil.—WILLIAMS v. EVANS (1853), 1 E. & B. 727 ; 22 L. 1703. ——.]—By his will dated Feb. 6, 1892, testator declared (inter alia), that, as to one-eighth share of his residuary estate, it should be held by his exors. on certain trusts. These trusts provided that the income of the share should be paid to testator's son, T., until "he should become bkpt. or do or suffer something whereby the income if belonging absolutely to him or some part thereof would become payable to or vested in some other person"; &, on determination in the lifetime of T. of the above trust, that the income should be applied during the remainder of T.'s life in favour of certain other specified persons; & after the decease of T., that the share should be divided among his children; "provided always that T., might by deed or will appoint that the whole or any part of the income of the share should after his death be paid to his widow, if any, during her life or for any less period." T. became bkpt. early in 1893. By a codicil dated July 27, 1893, testator declared his intention to vary the trusts of the share of T., & in pursuance thereof declared that such share should be held by his trustees upon the trusts thereafter recited. The trusts so recited made provision in the event of T. being prevented by reason of antecedent bkpcy. or by the happening of any other event from enjoying the life interest if it were given to him. In other respects, the trusts so cited followed the trusts in the will, except that no mention whatever was made of the power given by the will to T. to appoint to his widow. The trusts in the will were not expressly revoked by the codicil:—Held: the power of appointment still subsisted.—Re WOOD, WOOD v. WOOD (1900), 83 L. T. 157.

1704. ——.]—Testatrix, domiciled in Scotland, under the will of her mother had power to appoint by will or codicil attested by two witnesses certain trust funds to her children. By her will testatrix appointed such trust funds to her three daughters equally, & by a holograph codicil, signed but not witnessed, valid according to Scottish law & admitted to probate in England, she purported to appoint part of such funds to her sons & the remainder to her daughters. On a summons to have it determined whether the funds were divisible under the will or under the codicil, or whether such codicil operated as a revocation of the will:—

Held: there was no express revocation by the codicil of the appointment duly made by the will, consequently the codicil did not revoke the disposition by way of appointment made by the will except to the extent to which the appointment made by the codicil effectively interfered with the dispositions of the will.—Re WALKER, MACCOLL v. BRUCE, [1908] 1 Ch. 560; 77 L. By a codicil dated Feb. 17, 1915, after referring to his will, he gave & bequeathed "the residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will" to M. absolutely, & appointed her sole extrix. of the codicil. He died on Feb. 27, 1915:—Held: the residuary gift in the will was revoked by the codicil & under the gift in the codicil the whole of testator's estate undisposed of by legacies or specific bequests passed to M.—Re STOODLEY, HOOSON v. LOCOCK, [1916] 1 Ch. 242; 114 L. 1709. Erroneous belief as to persons benefiting under will.]—Where a devise in a will is clear, it is incumbent on those who contend that it has been revoked by a codicil to show that the intention to revoke is equally clear & free from doubt with the original intention to devise, for if there is only a reasonable doubt whether the clause of revocation was intended to include the particular devise, then such devise ought to stand.

A bequest of specific chattels by will is revoked by a bequest simpliciter of the same chattels by codicil to another. But where the latter bequest is not made simpliciter, but is prefaced by a recital showing that it was founded on a misconception of the true effect of the will, the same result will not necessarily follow.

Thus, where a will bequeathing specific chattels to A., who was not personally known to testator, was followed by a codicil reciting, erroneously, that by the will they were bequeathed to B., who was uncle to A., & a personal friend of testator, revoking that bequest on the ground that B. was lately dead, & testator's connection with his family thereby almost null, & bequeathing the same chattels to another family:—Held: the bequest in the will was not revoked by the codicil.—BARCLAY v. MASKELYNE (1858), John. 124; 28 L. 1710. ——.]—By a codicil to the will of a Chinese testator, whose testamentary disposition was in English & to be construed according to English law, certain clauses of the will were revoked & testator directed that at the termination of twenty-one years the proceeds of certain property should be distributed between his sons by a named Chinese wife who survived testator but had only one son. The will & codicil were admitted to probate. It was contended that the terms of one of the revoked clauses showed that the draftsman understood that two sons of testator by another Chinese wife, who predeceased testator, were the sons of the named wife, & that the intention of testator was that they should share in the distribution:—Held: the language of the codicil being unambiguous the revoked clause could not be resorted to.—CHOA ENG WAN v. CHOA GIANG TEE, [1923] A. iii. Evidence of Revocation.

1711. When evidence admitted—Ambiguity on face of will.]—I must here observe that in the Ct. of Probate there must be some ambiguity not upon the construction but upon the factum of the instrument, not whether a particular clause will have a particular effect, but whether deceased meant that particular clause to be part of the instrument, whether the codicil was meant to republish a former or a subsequent will (SIR JOHN NICHOLL).—FAWCETT v. JONES, CODRINGTON & PULTENEY (1810), 3 Phillim. 434; 161 E. In 1845 a solr. in ignorance of the existence of the will of 1845 prepared, in lieu of the codicil of 1844, a more formal codicil, which was executed in Jan. 1846, & in Mar. 1846, a further codicil was executed. The codicils of 1846 did not refer by date to any will, but only to her "last will," & the codicil of Jan. revived by reference to the contents of the will of 1842 that will, then destroyed.

An allegation (inter alia) pleaded the unexecuted draft of the will of 1842, & that the original was destroyed prior to Jan. 1846, & propounded the will of 1845 with the codicils of 1846. The ct. rejected so much of the allegation as propounded the will of 1845, & intimated its opinion that the two codicils of 1846 were alone entitled to probate, & that the unexecuted draft of the will of 1842 would not be entitled to probate, though the codicils of 1846 revived the destroyed will of 1842.

I apprehend that when testator refers in a codicil to a last will, & there is nothing in the contents of the codicil to point to any particular will, it must be construed to refer to the will in legal existence as the last will & not to a revoked will (DR. LUSHINGTON).

Declarations of testatrix would, I apprehend, be admissible evidence to prove a fact of destruction, though declarations as to which will testatrix intended should operate would not be admissible.

Now how will this fact, the previous destruction of the will of 1842, affect the construction of the codicil of Jan. 1846? Of course it may be urged that deceased never intended to revive an instrument, not only revoked, but destroyed. Presuming that testatrix remembered the destruction of this will, when she executed the codicil, it is not consistent with probability that she intended by the codicil to revive it.

But to what ultimate effect can this argument be carried? It cannot, I think, alter the construction I am bound to put on the codicil of Jan. 1846. I can construe that codicil to revive & confirm the will of 1842 only, because to that will alone the words can by any construction refer; but that will is gone, destroyed animo revocandi, the codicil cannot in effect revive that will.

What is the next question? Does it follow that because the codicil of Jan. 1846, is inoperative to revive the will of 1842, that it should apply to the will of 1845? Certainly not; there is nothing in that codicil which can apply to the will of 1845.

Then could it be argued that the will of 1845, being a will in existence when the codicil was executed, & not being specifically revoked by that codicil, would remain unrevoked in consequence of the codicil being inoperative to revive the will of 1842 by reason of its destruction? Can I consider all that relates to the confirmation of the will of 1842, & consequent implied revocation of other wills, pro non scripto? I think not. I think that the will of 1845 is necessarily revoked by the codicil of Jan. 1846, confirming another will of a different tenor disposing of the whole property. If this be so, I cannot decree probate of the will of 1845, for the case stands thus, that the will of 1845, though a subsisting instrument at the execution of the codicil of Jan. 1846, is revoked by necessary implication, when a prior will is confirmed, & I can discover no principle upon which such revocation should not operate, though the will of 1842 be not in existence. I think the revocation must stand, though the revival of the will of 1842 is inoperative, & for this reason, the intention to confirm the will of 1842 is wholly irrespective of the will of 1845 (DR. LUSHINGTON).—HALE v. TOKELOVE (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 318; 16 L. T. O. S. 85; 14 Jur. 817; 163 E. R. 1331.

In Jan. 1912, he by letter presented his "collection of coins" with the cabinets to the university on certain conditions, but no coins or cabinets were then handed over. In Feb. 1912, testator made a codicil to his will & thereby, after reciting the gift of coins & cabinets in his will, he revoked the gift & declared that he had during his lifetime handed over to the university all the coins, & cabinets he intended to leave them by his will. In Aug. 1912, testator delivered to the university eleven cabinets containing the greater part of his coins, but some remained in his possession. On the death of testator in 1915 the university claimed the remainder of the coins as part of his gift to them on the ground that the revocation by the codicil was based on an erroneous assumption of fact & was therefore conditional & inoperative so that the original gift in the will took effect:—Held: the revocation by the codicil was not conditional but absolute, & the university was only entitled to the coins & cabinets they had received in testator's lifetime; evidence of the statements made by testator at the time the coins & cabinets were handed over was not admissible.—Re CHURCHILL, TAYLOR v. MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY, [1917] 1 Ch. 206; 86 L. 1736. ——.]—A will was destroyed animo revocandi; testator expressing himself at the time to the effect that he trusted the codicils thereto would not be affected thereby. The codicils were held to be unrevoked.

Nothing can be clearer than when deceased destroyed the will he conceived that the codicils would not be affected thereby. His words at the time were, "It will not affect that codicils"; thereby showing that it was his intention that the codicils should operate, should he make no other will. The destruction of a will is not necessarily a destruction of the codicils to that will, although primâ facie it is so. Before the passing of the present Wills Act, if a will were destroyed it amounted to a presumptive revocation of all the codicils to that will, but since the passing of that Act there must be an intention to destroy. Here there was no such intention; deceased did not intend to destroy the codicils which remained untouched, but, on the contrary, he expressed an anxiety that the interest of the persons benefited by the codicils should not suffer by his act. The ct. is bound to pronounce for the two codicils (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—CLOGSTOUN v. WALCOTT (1848), 5 Notes of Cases, 623; 11 L. T. O. S. 185; 12 Jur. 422.

Where a will & codicil to it have been in existence, & the will has been subsequently destroyed by testator, the burden of proof is on the party setting up the codicil, to show that it was the intention of testator that it should operate separately from the will; otherwise the presumption is that by the destruction of the will the codicil was revoked.—GRIMWOOD v. COZENS (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr. 364; 5 Jur. In Sept. 1860, deceased expressed his displeasure with certain legatees under the will, & in the presence of N. took the will out of a box, cut off his own signature & those of the attesting witnesses, & replaced the mutilated paper in the box, where it was found at his death. At various times between Sept. 1860, & his death, B. gave certain instructions to his solrs. with respect to another will, but nothing was ever settled or completed. Three or four days before his death deceased executed a bond securing to N. a monthly payment of £4.

No will could be found, although a will was proved to have been in existence, & in testator's possession previous to the date of the codicil. The ct. was of opinion, looking at the provisions of the codicil, that testator intended it to be independent of the will, & therefore admitted it to probate until such time as the will should be found.—In the Goods of GREIG (1866), L. No testamentary papers were found in testator's repositories, but soon after his death, which occurred in July, 1895, a friend of testator produced to his solrs. holograph copies of the will & of a document which purported to have been executed as a codicil to the will & to bear date 1892, & also an original holograph document duly executed & bearing date Aug. 22, 1892, & described as "a second codicil to my will." The last document gave a legacy of £800 among the children of the friend to whom testator had sent it & in whose custody it had remained:—Held: the will & first codicil had been revoked, & the second codicil alone was entitled to probate.—PAIGE v. BROOKS (1896), 75 L. Testator appointed A., B., & C. to be trustees & executors. He revoked the appointment of C. as exor. & trustee by his first codicil. By his first codicil he gave his residuary estate to his widow. By the fourth codicil he revoked the dispositions made of his real & personal estate & instead he gave his real & personal estate to his daughter; remainder as to the same to his grandson & his heirs in strict entail, as in his will directed, but he was not to take possession till he should attain thirty-one, & on failure of issue of his grandson, he ordered that his estate & effects should go & descend as by his will directed:—Held: the gift of the residuary property by the first codicil was not revoked by the fourth codicil; the funded property did not fall into the residue, but was given for life to the daughter, remainder in strict settlement to the grandson for life, remainder to his eldest son.—PATCH v. GRAVES (1855), 3 Drew. 347; 61 E. By a second codicil after reciting that he was desirous of altering the residuary devise contained in his will, he made a specific devise, & in all other respects confirmed his will. He afterwards made a third codicil, by which, after referring to his will by date & reciting a promise to that effect, he directed his trustees to grant an underlease of a house to his daughter-in-law, & gave his wife a pecuniary legacy in addition to the benefit she derived under his said will, & concluded "in all other respects I confirm my will except as altered by a certain codicil made thereto in 1878, whereby I revoked a legacy to my daughter M.":—Held: the words of confirmation in the first & third codicils were to be read as meaning that testator did not intend to alter his general testamentary dispositions further than in the specific way mentioned in those codicils; & the devise in the second codicil being clear, no intention to revoke it had been shown with sufficient clearness to enable the ct. to reject that devise.—FOLLETT v. PETTMAN (1883), 23 Ch. 1762 i. Deed.]—Testator devised 200 acres to one of his sons, a minor, & the remainder (100 acres) to testator's wife. The husband & wife afterwards agreed to live apart; that her 100 acres should be given to her at once; & that, in consideration of this, she should release her dower in the rest of his land. To effect this object, both joined in a deed of the 300 acres to a trustee; the trustee conveyed to the wife her 100 acres, & declared that he held the rest in trust to convey as the grantor should appoint:—Held: the deed operated as a revocation of the will in equity, as well as at law.—LOUGHEAD v. KNOTT, 15 Gr. 34.—CAN.

1777. Settlement.]—By a settlement certain real estate was conveyed to trustees, upon trust to sell, & to pay the proceeds of sale to such persons as A. should by deed or will appoint. By a second deed of settlement A. appointed that the trustees of the first settlement should stand possessed of the sale moneys in trust for such persons as she should by will appoint. In the one case the property was given to the two sons; & by the second will, to one son only (per CUR.).

1783. "Otherwise destroying."]—STEPHENS v. TAPRELL, No. 1784, post.

1784. Actual destruction.]—Cancellation of a will is not a revocation thereof, under the words "otherwise destroying" the same, in Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20

It appears to me quite impossible to put such a construction upon the Act as to say, that cancelling a will, by striking it through with a pen, is a destruction of the will. When the legislature, after mentioning "burning" a will, & "tearing" a will, speak of "otherwise destroying" a will, they must be understood as intending some mode of destruction ejusdem generis, not an act which is not a destroying in the primary meaning of the word, though it may have the sense metaphorically, as being a destruction of the contents of the will; it never could have been their intention that the cancelling of a will should be a mode of destroying it (SIR H. JENNER).—STEPHENS v. TAPRELL (1840), 2 Curt. 458; 163 E. R. 473.

1785. —.]—A will is not revoked by mere abandonment; to operate a revocation, there must be some unequivocal act of cancellation or obliteration by the testator himself or by some person in his presence & by his direction.—ANDREW v. MOTLEY (1862), 12 C. B. N. S. 514; 142 E. R. 1243; subsequent proceedings, 12 C. B. N. S. 526.

1786. —.]—Testator drew his pen through the lines of various parts of his will, wrote on the back of it, "This is revoked," & threw it among a heap of waste papers in his sitting room. A servant took it up & put it on a table in the kitchen. It remained lying about in the kitchen till testator's death seven or eight years afterwards, & was then found uninjured:—Held: the will was not revoked, the words "or otherwise destroying" in Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20, not being satisfied, as, whatever testator intended, the will had not been actually injured.

It is quite clear that a symbolical burning will not do, a symbolical tearing will not do, nor will a symbolical destruction. There must be the act as well as the intention (JAMES, L.J.).—CHEESE v. LOVEJOY (1877), 2 P. D. 251; 37 L. T. 295; 25 W. R. 853; sub nom. Re HARRIS, CHEESE v. LOVEJOY, 46 L. J. P. 66, C. A.

Testator was displeased at her having taken it, & she, being urged by him to give it back, promised to burn it, & pretended to do so in his presence, but did not. Testator afterwards told another person that the devisee had thrown the will on the fire ; but, on that party expressing a doubt, testator said that he did not care, & that, if he was alive & well, he would make another. A. let the will fall on the ground, but in a few minutes picked it up & refused to burn it ; it was replaced in his drawers upstairs, & a few days afterwards, being about to sail for India, he burnt certain papers, but not the will, to which his attention was at that time drawn ; he afterwards showed a paper, which he called his will, to the principal legatee. He sailed for India, still expressing his intention of making a new will ; after his death the torn will was found in the house in Wales in which he had been staying :—Held : in order to revoke a will by tearing it is not necessary to rend the will into more pieces than it originally consisted of ; but it is sufficient if testator intended the tearing actually done of itself to work a revocation, without any further act ; there being satisfactory evidence that the paper had been duly executed, & no evidence to prove that, by partial tearing, testator had carried into effect the original intention he had had to revoke the instrument, it was entitled to probate.—ELMS v. ELMS (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 155 ; 27 L. 1805. —— Signature cut off one sheet—Circumstances showing intention not to revoke whole will.]—Where a will in the custody of testator is found after his death mutilated, the presumption, in the absence of evidence, is that it was mutilated by him after its execution, & if there be a codicil after the execution of the codicil.

Testatrix wrote her will upon the four pages of a sheet of paper, & upon the first page of another sheet, & in the presence of the attesting witnesses signed it at the bottom of that page, & also at the top of the next page, & underneath the latter signature the attesting witnesses signed their names. She afterwards wrote & duly executed a codicil on the second page referring to the will. After her death both sheets of paper were found in a box, inclosed in separate envelopes ; but the top of the second sheet, & with it the signature of deceased, was cut off, the signatures of the attesting witnesses remaining. There was no proof that any writing besides testatrix's signature had been cut off, though this appeared probable from the fact that the conclusion of the first sheet referred to a certain disposition of property as following, which was wanting in the second sheet :—Held : (1) in the absence of evidence it must be presumed that deceased mutilated the will after the execution of the codicil ; (2) when the codicil was executed, the will & codicil formed but one testament ; (3) the manner in which the will was cut, the preservation of both sheets, & other circumstances showed that testatrix intended not to revoke the will altogether, but only such part as was cut off ; & therefore, the remaining part of the will & the codicil were entitled to probate.—CHRISTMAS & CHRISTMAS v. WHINYATES (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 81 ; 1 New Rep. 336 ; 32 L. 1806. —— Destruction of document referred to in will.]—Testator, who died in May, 1886, by his will, dated in Dec. 1871, disposed of all his property in favour of his children, & declared that whereas he had advanced, or might advance, for the benefit of his children, certain sums towards their advancement in life or for their benefit, & all which sums respectively would appear & be mentioned in a book marked " A," & signed by him, every sum of money appearing or mentioned in such book to have been so advanced or paid on account of any child should be taken in or towards satisfaction of such child's share, & brought into hotchpot.

In Jan. 1886, testator tore from the book marked " A " several leaves, upon which entries of such advances had been written, & directed them to be burnt in his presence, & wrote on the book, the cover of which was preserved, a memorandum, stating that the book had been destroyed by him. It appeared that some of the sums advanced had been advanced before the date of the will, & others subsequently.

An originating summons was taken out for the purpose of determining the effect of the above clause :—Held : (1) the book would probably have been admitted to probate, if it had contained writing ; & if a document formed part of a will it was liable to revocation in the same manner as the will itself ; (2) as the book had been destroyed by testator, no sum advanced by him, whether before or after the date of the will could be brought into hotchpot.—Re COYTE, COYTE v. COYTE (1887), 56 L. 1807. —— Name of executor cut out.]—Testatrix, having duly executed her will, proceeded sometime afterwards to cut out, with a pair of scissors, the name of one G., who was named as an exor. therein, wherever G.'s name appeared in the document.

She stated to one or more persons that she had " cut G. out of her will," her alleged reason being on account of some disagreement which had arisen between G. & his wife, who was a daughter of testatrix :—Held : the will was only partially revoked, & it was entitled to probate in the state in which it was found upon the death of testatrix.—In the Goods of LEACH (1890), 63 L. 1808. —— Two sheets destroyed & others substituted — Remainder unintelligible.]—Testator left a will which was contained in five sheets of paper. Each sheet was signed by testator & duly attested by two witnesses. The whole five sheets purported to have been executed on June 16, 1900. In reality the first two sheets of the will had been altered by testator after June 16, 1900, re-engrossed by a firm of law stationers, & resigned by himself & the two attesting witnesses on Dec. 9, 1901 :—Held : although testator had not had any intention of revoking his will, but rather had desired it to stand as he had left it, the effect of the destruction of the original first two sheets on the last three being such as to make the latter unintelligible & unworkable, such destruction of a part of the will destroyed the whole, & therefore the whole will was revoked, & must be pronounced against.—LEONARD v. LEONARD, [1902] P. 243 ; 71 L. 1810. ——— ——— ———.]—By the usual statement in the witnessing clause at the end of his will, that he has set his hand to the preceding pages, testator makes the signatures on those pages a part of his will ; & if, having so recited, he afterwards, animo revocandi, tears off the signatures from the preceding pages, it is a good revocation of the whole will under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20.—WILLIAMS v. TYLEY (1858), John. 530 ; 32 L. T. O. S. 194 ; 5 Jur. N. S. 35 ; 7 W. R. 116 ; 70 E. R. 531.

1811. .]—At the death of deceased, a paper writing, inclosed in a half sheet of foolscap paper, & indorsed in the handwriting of deceased, "Will of Major J. S.," was found with other papers in a locked drawer. It had been cut in two pieces immediately above the signatures of deceased & the attesting witnesses, but both pieces were preserved :—Held : the ct. could not grant probate of such a document.—In the Goods of SIMPSON (1859), 5 Jur. N. S. 1366.

1812. ——— ——— ———.]—H. duly executed a will, appointing exors., on six sheets, by signing her name at the end of each of the first five sheets, & at the foot of the will on the sixth sheet. The testimonium clause stated that she had so executed the will. H. afterwards executed a codicil, which was written at the back of the last sheet of the will, containing an appointment of exors. H. subsequently cut off her signatures at the end of each of the first five sheets, & drew her pen through her signature at the foot of the will on sheet six. There was satisfactory evidence that she intended to revoke the will but not the codicil :—Held : H. having cut off a portion of the will, which, though not in fact, was treated by her as a material part of it, had done an act of revocation sufficient to satisfy Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20. Probate granted of the codicil alone.—In the Goods of HARRIS (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 485 ; 4 New Rep. 485 ; 33 L. J. P. M. & A. 181 ; 11 L. T. 276 ; 28 J. P. 680 ; 10 Jur. N. S. 684 ; 161 E. R. 1364.

1813. ——— ——— ———.]—Testator made his will, appointing two exors. Subsequently he became dissatisfied with one of them, & shortly before his death he cut from the will his own signature & those of the attesting witnesses, with the presumed intention of revoking the appointment of the obnoxious exor. :—Held : the ct. could not look at the intention, such acts always amounting to a revocation.—In the Goods of MARSHALL (1869), 17 W. R. 687.

1814. ——— ——— ———.]—Testatrix executed a will in duplicate, & retained one copy herself, but placed the other in independent keeping. Subsequently she revoked the copy in her own possession, tearing off the signature. The ct. declined to grant probate on motion of the unmutilated paper which had remained out of her possession.—In the Goods of SLADE (LADY) (1869), 20 L. T. 330 ; 33 J. P. 311.

1815. ——— ——— Scratched out with knife.]—A will which after execution had remained in the custody of deceased was found in her repositories after her death with her own signature & the signatures of the attesting witnesses scratched out as with a knife :—Held : there was a revocation within the requirements of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20.—In the Goods of MORTON (1887), 12 P. D. 141 ; 56 L. J. P. 96 ; 57 L. T. 501 ; 51 J. P. 680 ; 35 W. R. 735 ; 3 T. L. R. 577.

1816. ——— ——— ——— Signature still legible.] Scratching with a knife, which is a lateral cutting unless carried by testator to the extent of rendering his signature illegible, does not amount to a revocation within the terms of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20.—In the Goods of GODFREY (1893), 69 L. T. 22 ; 1 R. 484.

1817. ——— Witnesses' signature—Cut or torn off.]—At deceased's death his will & codicil were found in this condition, the names of the attesting witnesses & the attestation clauses were torn away from the last sheet of the will & the foot of the codicil, but deceased's signature remained intact both at the end of the will & codicil, & at the foot of each sheet of the will. Certain lines & parts of lines in the will were also struck through with blue ink :—Held : the act of tearing was sufficient to revoke the will, when combined with the presumption, arising from the circumstances, that it was strongly against deceased's intention that this will should stand.—ABRAHAM v. JOSEPH (1859), 5 Jur. N. S. 179.

1818. ——— ——— ———.]—(1) The signatures of the attesting witnesses to a will being an essential part of the will, the tearing them off by testator animo revocandi revokes the will.

(2) Where a will of which the testator has the custody is found so mutilated after his death, the presumption is, that the mutilation was the act of testator, done animo revocandi.—EVANS v. DALLOW, In the Goods of DALLOW (1862), 31 L. J. P. M. & A. 128 ; 26 J. P. 631.

1820. ——— ——— ———.]—Testator cut from the will the portion of the document on which the name & address of the second attesting witness were written. The excised part was also mutilated, but the name & address of the witness remained legible upon it, & it was found with the will in testator's writing desk. The ct. being satisfied that the name had not been removed animo revocandi, decreed probate of the instrument.

Semble : the names of the attesting witnesses are an essential part of the will, & their removal from the will animo revocandi will render it inoperative.—In the Goods of WHEELER (1879), 49 L. J. P. 29 ; 42 L. T. 60 ; 44 J. P. 285 ; 28 W. R. 476.

1821. ——— ——— Name re-written by another person.]—A will, being regularly executed & attested, the name of one of the attesting witnesses, with the knowledge of deceased, afterwards cut off, & written by another person, not in the presence of deceased, admitted to probate.—In the Goods of TOZER (1842), 2 Notes of Cases, 11 ; 7 Jur. 134.

1823. ——— ——— ——— Names illegible.]—Testator, new will, & having the draft with him for that purpose, cancelled the first will not by obliterations & alterations, but by tearing off his name & seal, & then died suddenly before executing the other will :—Held : A. died intestate.—DOE d. besides a will, left a second testamentary paper, to which his signature was attached. The place, however, in which the names of the attesting witnesses should have appeared was scratched over with a pen & ink, so that no letter of a name could be deciphered :—Held : this latter paper was revoked.—In the Goods of JAMES (1860), 7 Jur. N. S. 52.

1824. —— —— Cut through—In cutting off immaterial portion.]—Testatrix duly executed her last will. At some date subsequently she added something in writing at the foot of the will. She afterwards appeared to have cut off this addition, &, in doing this, cut through the name of one of the attesting witnesses. Sufficient, however, remained for the name to be still legible. There was also a piece cut out in the margin of the will. The signature of testatrix all the other material parts of the will remained intact. The ct., upon motion, admitted the document to proof in its mutilated form.—In the Goods of TAYLOR (1890), 63 L. T. 230 ; 6 T. L. R. 375.

1825. —— —— Erasure by witnesses themselves.]—The erasure of their signatures by the attesting witnesses to a will cannot affect the validity of the instrument.

A., who had previously executed a will & codicil, & who was suffering from paralysis, requested two physicians who were in attendance upon him to prepare for him a fresh testamentary instrument. One of the physicians thereupon wrote upon a card the following words : " £30,000 to Miss Robinson, to be tied up to her for life, & after her death to come back to my family & divided fair & equally." Testator made his mark in the middle of the writing after the word " life," although there was sufficient space for the mark at the foot of the card. The two physicians who were present when the mark was made signed their initials on the back of the card, the initials being preceded by the words " Witnesses to mark," & followed by the date. The witnesses, with the consent of deceased, afterwards erased their initials :—Held : although the writing on the card constituted a testamentary document, & the writing by the witnesses of their initials on the back of the card was a sufficient attestation, & the subsequent erasure of those initials would not operate as a revocation of the instrument, testator's mark in the middle of the writing was not a valid execution, & probate of the card must be refused.—MARGARY v. ROBINSON (1886), 12 P. 1850 i. Will not revoked.]—There is no doubt that certain acts done by a testator, which operate as a revocation or destruction of a will or codicil, may admit of qualification. 1854. —— ——.]—B. duly executed a will in Aug. 1857; in July, 1859, he executed another will, purporting to revoke the will of 1857; in a suit respecting the validity of the will of 1859, the Ct. of Probate pronounced against the validity of such will. The draft of the will of 1857 was then propounded, & it was proved that after the execution of the will of 1859, B. had called for the will of 1857, & after appearing to read it had torn it up saying, "It is of no use now, I have another." Most of the above facts were admitted on the record, & the ct. held that there was no proof of the destruction of the will of 1857 with intention to revoke, so as to satisfy Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 20, decreed probate of the draft thereof, & ordered the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate.—CLARKSON v. CLARKSON (1862), 2 Sw. & Tr. 497; 31 L. 1855. —— Erroneous impression that will invalid.]—If a testamentary paper be cancelled, law infers the revocation of it unless it can be clearly shown that it once existed as a finished will, & that testator adhered to it throughout in mind & intention, notwithstanding its cancellation.

It is not attempted, however, to set up this as an unfinished paper, & one in its progress to completion; but as a finished paper, which has been cancelled, sine animo revocandi by testatrix, under an erroneous impression, that the law did not permit her, as a minor, to dispose of her property by will. Now it is perfectly true, that, in legal consideration, a will may be cancelled, without being revoked. The cancelling, itself, is an equivocal act, &, in order to operate as a revocation, must be done animo revocandi. A will, therefore, cancelled through accident, or by mistake, is not revoked (SIR J. NICHOLL).—THYNNE (LORD JOHN) v. STANHOPE (1822), 1 Add. 52; 162 E. R. 19.

1856. —— ——.]—Testator, under the false impression that his will was invalid, tore it up. Immediately afterwards, on reconsideration, he collected the pieces, & placed them together amongst his papers of importance, & preserved them until his death:—Held: as the act done was not accompanied by an intention to revoke a valid will, it was ineffectual, & the will was admitted to probate.—GILES v. WARREN (1872), L. 1857. —— ——.]—Testatrix, being under an erroneous impression that a codicil had not been duly executed, directed it to be torn up & sent to her solr. to be recopied, but died before she could re-execute it:—Held: in the circumstances, probate of the codicil might be allowed.—In the Goods of THORNTON (1889), 14 P. 1858. —— Execution of codicil—Will destroyed as useless.]—Testator, having duly executed a codicil to his last will, destroyed the latter document under the impression that it was of no further use. The ct. admitted the contents of the will as set forth in a draft thereof, together with the codicil, to probate.—BEARDSLEY v. LACEY (1897), 67 L. J. P. 35; 78 L. T. 25; 14 T. L. R. 140.

i. Will Not Forthcoming at Testator's Death.

1859. Whether destruction with intention to revoke presumed.]—Deceased died on Oct. 19, 1831, having made a will in 1820, & three codicils, all formally executed & attested to carry realty; he destroyed the will, but on each of the codicils was written, "June 18, 1830, my will, J. P.," & other indorsements at a subsequent date, inferring that he considered that at such time he had no will. In 1830 he executed a new will & a codicil, the latter subsequent to June, 1830, which will & codicil were not forthcoming, & in 1831 he executed a settlement. Three codicils, the settlement, & its envelope were propounded as together containing the will, the ct., holding first, that the destruction of the will of 1820, primâ facie, revoked the codicils, that the words written on the codicils were not conclusive of an intention that they should operate as substantive papers, that evidence dehors the papers was therefore admissible, & on such evidence that the will & codicil of 1830 must be presumed to have been destroyed

1861. ——.]—Deceased made a will in 1840, & in 1867, while on a visit to a friend, he employed himself much in writing, & stated he was writing out his will, & he gave his friend a paper-writing which, he said, was a copy of his will which he was going to execute. Shortly after he duly executed a will, which, however, could not be found. The paper-writing revoked all former wills:—Held: the will of 1840 was revoked by a will made in 1867, which, not being forthcoming, must be presumed to be revoked by destruction, & an intestacy was decreed.—JOHNSON v. LYFORD (1868), L. 1866. —— ——.]—In June, 1856, deceased duly executed a will, which remained in his custody & possession. In Jan. 1861, the draft of a new will was forwarded to him for perusal, but such new will was never completed. A few months before his death, in conversation, he referred to the executed will as being still in existence, & at a later period expressed an intention to settle the terms of the new one; he died, however, without carrying out his intention. On his death the draft of the new will was found but not the executed will:—Held: as the executed will, having been in the possession of deceased, was not found on his death, the presumption arose that he had destroyed it animo revocandi; & as no evidence was forthcoming to rebut that presumption deceased died intestate.—In the Goods of MITCHESON (1863), 32 L. J. P. M. & A. 202; 9 Jur. N. S. 360.

1867. —— ——.]—Testator made & duly executed a will & afterwards a codicil revoking certain portions of the will. Both documents were handed to him by his solr. They were in separate envelopes which were sealed up. On testator's death the will only was found, with the seal of the envelope containing it broken:—Held: although the presumption of law must prevail as to the destruction of the codicil, probate could only be granted of such parts of the will as the codicil by its execution had not revoked.—In the Goods of DEBAC, SANGER v. HART (1897), 77 L. 1868. —— —— Facts strengthening presumption.]—A. made her will in Mar. 1854, & a codicil in June, 1854, one of the legatees under the will having died since its execution. In May, 1856, she executed another codicil, among other things appointing one of the parties benefited under the codicil of 1854, to be exor., in the room of one appointed in the will. At her death, in Dec. 1857, the will & second codicil were found in a tin box at the Bank of England, in which she kept her papers; but the first codicil, of which testatrix took possession immediately after its execution, was nowhere to be found.

On motion for probate of the draft of the first codicil, with the consent of the residuary legatees:—Held: the primâ facie presumption of revocation was strengthened, rather than rebutted by the circumstances.—In the Goods of SHAW (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 62; 31 L. T. O. S. 41; 164 E. R. 630.

1869. —— —— Whether proof of non-existence of will at death necessary.]—The presumption that a will in testator's possession, & not forthcoming after his death, has been revoked, does not arise unless there is evidence to satisfy the ct. that it was not in existence at the time of his death.

A will which had been in testator's custody could not be found in his depositories after his death, but there was evidence of declarations recognising its existence up to within three weeks of his death; there was no evidence of any change of intention during those three weeks, & the only person who was interested in an intestacy had access to & made a search in the depositories before they were searched by any other person. Coupling these facts with the non-appearance of the person interested in an intestacy, the ct. refused to presume that the will had been revoked, & granted probate of the draft.—FINCH v. FINCH (1867), L. R. 1 P. & D. 371; 36 L. J. P. & M. 78; 16 L. T. 268; 31 J. P. 617; 15 W. R. 797.

1870. ——.]—If a will duly executed was in testator's possession when last seen, & is not forthcoming after his death, there is a presumption of law that he destroyed in animo revocandi, but that presumption may be rebutted by evidence of facts. A letter written by testator after the will that he had cancelled it is not evidence of an effective revocation, but it is admissible in evidence as showing the state of mind & intention of testator. The evidence in the particular case held not to be sufficient to rebut the presumption.—Re SYKES, DRAKE v. SYKES (1907), 23 T. L. R. 747, C. A.

(2) This question arises under peculiar circumstances. By it the nephews & nieces, with two exceptions, would have received 1*s.* each, & S. P. have been materially benefited. This paper was not propounded:—Held: the presumption that a will left in the custody of testator, & not found at his death, has been destroyed by testator, was rebutted in this case by reason of the suspicious conduct of deceased's maid, as connected with the document dated Aug. 3, 1857.—BATTYLL v. LYLES & PHILLIPS (1858), 4 Jur. The ct. held that evidence of declarations of an intention not to adhere to the will, produced by the opponents of the will, was admissible to contradict the evidence of adherence, whatever might be the form of words in which such intention was expressed; & therefore that a declaration by testator that he had burnt his will was admissible, not as evidence of the fact of destruction, but as evidence of intention.—KEEN v. KEEN (1873), L. 1884. .]—Testator, possessed of considerable real & personal estate, duly made & executed a holograph will, to which, at different times, he added eight codicils. The will & codicils were kept in a common box accessible to the inmates of the house. Upon testator's death, the will was missing, & was never found. Thereupon, a daughter of testator wrote out the contents of the will from memory, there being no draft or copy of it. The daughter had lived with testator all her life; he had constantly consulted her about the will & explained its provisions to her, & she had from time to time assisted him to make & alter it. It was admitted that there were some ulterior limitations of the real estate, & some small legacies which the daughter could not remember, but her veracity & honesty of purpose were not impugned by those who opposed probate. By the alleged will the daughter took a considerable share in testator's property, & particularly in the residuary personal estate. Her statement of the will was, in some degree, corroborated as to the realty by the codicils, & as to the personalty by other papers of testator's found in the box, & also by his verbal declarations made after the execution of the will to his friends & relatives, but there was no direct corroboration of the residuary bequest to the daughter. The ct., being satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of testator's having destroyed the will animo revocandi, & being also satisfied that the contents of the will were substantially as stated by the daughter:—Held: probate of the will as written down by the daughter should be granted.—SUGDEN

1898. —— Will divided in middle.]—A will was written upon very brittle paper. Testator had given instructions for a new will, but died before it could be executed. The former will was found in a box tied up with a draught of the new will, divided in the middle, but without any other indication of having been cancelled, the seal & signatures remaining :—Held : these circumstances did not afford a sufficient presumption that the paper was torn by deceased for the purpose of revoking it, but the possibility & probability was that it was occasioned by the wear & tear of a brittle paper.—BIGGE v. BIGGE (1845) 3 Notes of Cases, 601 ; 4 L. T. O. S. 474 ; 9 Jur. 192.

1899. —— Signature & attestation clause cut or torn off.]—A. made his will, being in extreme illness, on Dec. 15, & placed it in his mother's custody. At his request his mother gave it to him on Dec. 21. On Dec. 22 he died, & the will was found under the bolster of his bed, with the signatures & attestation clause torn off ; the latter were nowhere to be found. A. had expressed no dissatisfaction with his said will.

1902. —— —— Signatures also erased with ink.]—In 1897 testatrix duly executed her will, which was then placed untorn in an envelope, sealed up, & retained by her solr. In 1906, at her request, the solr. sent the will to testatrix. Some months later testatrix stated to two people that she had destroyed her will, that when she got better she would make a new one, but that if she never recovered she should die intestate, & all her property would be divided between her sisters & her brother. After the death of testatrix the will was found among her papers torn halfway across, the tear coinciding with the line of testatrix's signature, & that signature & those of the two attesting witnesses were also erased with ink:—Held: testatrix had torn her will animo revocandi.—NORTH v. NORTH (1909), 25 T. 1904. —— Signature cut out—Gummed into original place.]—On the death of deceased a will was found, the signature to which had been cut out, but gummed on to its former place. The will had been in the custody of testator up to the time of his death. Declarations of deceased made subsequent to the date of the will were proved of an intention to benefit his wife by will. No other will was forthcoming:—Held: the presumption that deceased cut out the signature animo revocandi was not rebutted, & the gumming on the signature in its original place did not revive the will.—BELL v. FOTHERGILL (1870), L. 1905. —— Original sheet removed—Other sheet substituted.]—Testator after duly executing his will, which was in five sheets, each of which was signed by himself & initialled by the attesting witnesses, took out three sheets & substituted three new ones, which he signed, but which were not attested. He did not alter the date of will, nor did he re-sign it, nor was it re-attested:—Held: the will was not entitled to probate.—TRELOAR v. LEAN (1889), 14 P. D. 49; 58 L. J. P. 39; 60 L. T. 512; 37 W. R. 560.

1906. —— Will torn up.]—Testatrix by her will left all she possessed to two persons, whom she named, in trust to pay the income to her husband during his lifetime, & directed that her estate should be divided equally between her four children at his death. There was no direction to pay debts & no appointment of exors. Testatrix expressed adherence to her will, which she retained in her own possession, but at her death it was found torn up. All parties interested consenting:—Held: there was on these facts no presumption of revocation, the persons named as trustees were not, in the absence of a direction to pay debts, exors. according to the tenor, & the proper form of grant was one, with the will annexed, to them as universal legatees in trust.—In the Estate of MACKENZIE, [1909] P. 305; 79 L. 1907. —— Onus of proof of intention—On party alleging revocation—Testator of unsound mind.]—A., having duly executed her will, subsequently became insane. Shortly before her death, it was discovered that the will had been mutilated by her; but it was proved to have been in her custody for a short time subsequent as well as prior to her insanity:—Held: there being satisfactory evidence of the due execution of the will, the onus of showing that it had been mutilated by testatrix when of sound mind was upon the party alleging its revocation.—HARRIS v. BERRALL (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 153; 7 W. 1908. —— —— —— Partial tearing leaving words legible.]—When a will is found in the possession of testator, partially torn, the presumption of law is that the tearing was done by testator. But the burden of proof that this tearing was done animo revocandi is on the party alleging the revocation. Partial tearing which leaves all the words of the will distinct & legible does not necessarily show an intention to revoke the will.—Re COWLING, JINKIN v. COWLING, [1924] P. 113; 93 L. J. Before his death he sends for an attorney to make a third will, but is senseless before he arrives. After his death, the first & second will are found together in a paper both cancelled ; but the duplicate of the first is found uncancelled amongst his other deeds & papers. The act of cancelling the latter will does not set up the duplicate of the former.

As if a man were to throw the ink upon his will, instead of the sand : though it might be a complete defacing of the instrument it would be no cancelling : or suppose a man, having two wills of different dates by him, should direct the former to be cancelled : & through mistake the person should cancel this latter : such an act would be no revocation of the last will : or suppose a man, having a will consisting of two parts, throws one unintentionally into the fire where it is burnt : it would be no revocation of the devises contained in such part (LORD MANSFIELD).

SUB-SECT. 8.—CONDITIONAL REVOCATION.

A. In General.

1942. What amounts to—Destruction in belief of revival of former will.]—The destruction of a last will, by burning or otherwise, does not revive an earlier will; & therefore, where testatrix caused her last will to be destroyed by burning it, at the same time expressing a wish that the provisions of an earlier will, which had been in terms revoked by a clause in the last will, should thereupon again become operative:—Held: to be only a conditional revocation of the last will, & as the condition was inoperative, the act of destruction was nugatory, & the last will was still valid & subsisting, &, as such, was entitled to probate.—WELCH & FREEMAN v. GARDNER (1887), 51 J. P. 760.

1943. —— Construction.]—Re CHURCHILL, TAYLOR v. MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY, No. 1716, ante.

B. Dependent Relative Revocation.

(a) In General.

1944. Foundation of doctrine.]—Testator executed a will in 1864 revoking all former wills. In 1865 he destroyed this will, with an intention, expressed at the time, that he wished to substitute for it a will of 1862, which he held in his hand:—Held: the act of destruction by testator was referable solely to his intention to validate the will of 1862, & that act being conditional, & the condition being unfulfilled, there was no revocation.

I conceive that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation properly applies to facts such as this case involves. This doctrine is based on the principle that all acts by which testator may physically destroy or mutilate a testamentary instrument are in their nature equivocal. They may be the result of accident, or, if intentional, of various intentions. It is, therefore, necessary in each case to study the act done by the light of the circumstances under which it occurred, & the declarations of testator with which it may have been accompanied. For unless it be done animo revocandi, it is no revocation. What, then, if the act of destruction be done with the sole intention of setting up & establishing some other testamentary paper, for which the destruction of the paper in question was only designed to make way? It is clear that in such case the animus revocandi had only a conditional existence, the condition being the validity of the paper intended to be substituted, & such has been the course of decision in the various cases quoted in argument (SIR J. P. WILDE).—POWELL v. POWELL (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 209; 35 L. J. P. & M. 100; 14 L. T. 800.

1949. ——.]—Testatrix, having a will in her hand, dictated the alterations she desired to be made in the first part of it to a friend, who wrote them down. Testatrix, feeling unwell, desired her friend to stop there, & then tore off & burnt so much of her will as had been covered by the memorandum written at her dictation. This memorandum, together with the rest of the will, which contained the residuary clause & the signatures of testatrix & witnesses & the attestation clause intact, was placed in a desk by testatrix & locked up, & she believed when she did so that these papers constituted a new will, & were not merely instructions for such a will:—Held: it was a case of dependent relative revocation, a revocation dependent on the papers locked up constituting a new will, & probate was granted of the original will as contained in the portion which remained & the draft of the part which was destroyed.

Although testator does an act which unexplained would be one of revocation, yet if it appear that he did it only as part of the means of setting up another will if that end be not accomplished the former will is not revoked (SIR J. HANNEN).—

PART X. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 8.—B. (b).

1947 i. Destruction with intention to substitute former will.]—Testator executed a will in 1890 revoking former wills. In 1891 he destroyed this will with an intention expressed of substituting for it a previous will he had made in 1880:—Held: the act of destruction by testator was referable solely to his intention to validate the former will of 1880, & that act being conditional, & the condition being unfulfilled, there was no revocation.—BOWMAN v. BUTLER (1894), 15 N. S. W. L. R. (B. & P.) 7; 4 N. S. W. Bkpty. Cas. 54.—AUS.

1947 ii. ——.]—In a suit brought by W. for a grant of administration to her of the estate of her deceased husband, the evidence showed that one of several wills of deceased had been destroyed by him, but it was not clearly shown that this destroyed will was the last will of deceased; the suit was therefore dismissed, pltf. W. not having discharged the onus laid on her of proving the revocation. From the evidence it appeared that, even if the destroyed will was in fact, the last will of deceased by which former wills had been revoked the will had only been destroyed with the intention of reviving a former will:—Held: this was no revocation.—WARD v. CROOK (1896), 17 N. S. W. L. R. (B.) 64.—AUS.

1947 iii. ——.]—M. I. signed a printed form of will containing blanks, the printed matter including a revocation clause, & his signature was duly witnessed by two witnesses. All the blanks in the form were filled in by M. I. subsequently to execution. On motion on notice by the person named as exor. to have the revocative part alone admitted to probate, the ct. found the following facts:—(1) the attempted revocation was merely the first act towards accomplishing testator's design to make a new will; (2) it was dependent or conditional on a new will being made; (3) no will was made:—Held: the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied, & probate should be refused without requiring the alleged will to be propounded.—In the Goods of IRVINE, [1919] 2 I. 1950. —— Act must be referable to intention.]—Testator having made three wills, the last of which was not duly executed, subsequently burned the second & third & preserved the first. The only witness present at the time was a person who had an interest in upholding either of the two first wills, but who took nothing under the third will.

The ct. not being satisfied on such evidence that the "act of destruction was referable wholly & solely to the intention of setting up" the first will, declined to apply the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, & pronounced for an intestacy.—ECKERSLEY v. PLATT (1866), L. 1951. —— Former will.]—Testatrix destroyed a will without stating at the time her intention in doing so. 1952. —— ——.]—Testator duly executed a will on Dec. 16, 1887, whereby he left all his property to his wife, subject to a legacy of £2,000 to a niece whom they had brought up. On May 1, 1897, he executed a second will, whereby he left his property to his wife for life, with remainder to a sister-in-law. On Apr. 6, 1899, he executed a third will, revoking all previous wills. This will benefited his wife to a greater extent than the will of May 1, 1897, but not to the same extent as the will of Dec. 16, 1887. On May 24, 1899, it being his wedding day, testator told his wife it should not pass without the destruction of the will of Apr. 6, 1899, in which he said he had been unjust to her; & he said he wished his property to go by the will of Dec. 16, 1887. The servant was ordered to come into the room that she might be present when the will was destroyed, & in her presence testator tore it up & gave her the pieces to burn, repeating to her first what he had previously said to his wife:—Held: testator destroyed the will of Apr. 6, 1899, with the sole intention, wish, & expectation, & in the belief that the result of such destruction would be to revive & set up the will of Dec. 16, 1887, & therefore the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied, & the ct. pronounced for the will of Apr. 6, 1899, as contained in a draft propounded by pltf.—COSSEY v. COSSEY (1900), 69 L. Frauds, it should not operate as a revocation; or at most it could only operate as a revocation pro tanto, as to the trustee whose name was obliterated; leaving the devise good as to the old trustee whose name was retained.—SHORT d. 1955. —— Admissibility of evidence of original words.]—The principle of dependent relative revocation applies to the case where testator has so entirely erased the name of a legatee that it is no longer apparent, & has substituted another name for it. The ct. will receive evidence to show what the original name was, & restore it to the probate if satisfied that testator only revoked the first bequest on the supposition that he had effectually substituted a new legatee.

The statute of Wills gives no effect to obliterations, except so far as the original words shall not be apparent, & this has been decided to mean "apparent on an inspection of the instrument," not "apparent by extrinsic evidence" (SIR J. HANNEN).—In the Goods of MCCABE (1873), L. R. 3 P. & D. 94; 42 L. J. P. & M. 79; 29 L. T. 250; 38 J. P. 9.

But the testator's intention is a question of fact to be ascertained from his declarations & the surrounding circumstances, & where that intention would be defeated by restoring the original words the ct. is not bound to apply the doctrine of dependent relative revocation & may hold that the original words were revoked although the other words were ineffectually substituted.

By the later will he appointed the same exors. as in the previous will & he inserted therein a clause revoking all previous wills. A married woman was named in both wills as a legatee of the sum of £500. Her husband witnessed the last will, the legacy to her thus falling under Wills Act, 1915, s. 13:—Held: the doctrine of dependent relative revocation did not apply, & the revocation of the earlier will was complete & effectual.—Re BOURKE, [1923] V. 1959. Destruction with intention to make new will—New will not made or not executed.]—A., on July 17, 1812, made a will, by which he devised certain real estates to his wife for life; & on her death, to M.; & on the death of his wife & M. to his exors. in fee, upon certain trusts. The will, which was attested by three witnesses, concluded by stating that A. had signed his name to the two first sides, & his hand & seal to the last side of the will, which was written on three sides of a sheet of paper. A. put his name & seal at the end of the will, but did not sign his name to the two first sides. In Nov. 1816, he made various interlineations & obliterations, the effect of which, as regarded his real estate, was to confine the first devise to his wife, to her widowhood, & to strike out the devise to M.; the original date was struck out, & the day of Nov. 1816, was substituted. The will was never re-signed, re-published, or re-attested; but, in the following month, A. caused a fair copy of it to be made, & added one interlineation not affecting his real estate; but the copy was never signed, published, or attested. The will & fair copy were found locked up in a drawer at the residence of testator, who died on Dec. 21, 1816:—Held: the will was well executed; & there was no revocation of it as it stood originally.—WINSOR v. PRATT (1821), 2 Brod. & Bing. 650; 5 Moore, C. B. gave evidence that before executing this codicil testatrix had stated to him the alterations she desired to make in her will, & that he had made a pencil memorandum of her various fresh bequests, repeating each item to her, & that, except so far as to give effect to the new wishes so stated to him, testatrix did not intend to alter her previous dispositions. In 1864 she cut out the names of the attesting witnesses to the earlier will, in the presence of a fellow servant. Both documents were retained in her possession until her death:—Held: the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied, & the will of 1855 was entitled to probate.—In the Goods of MIDDLETON (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 583; 34 L. Testatrix destroyed the will of 1901 in the belief that the document of 1907 was a valid will. There was evidence of the due execution of the will of 1901, & that the provisions contained in the completed draft which was put in evidence were in accordance with those in the will. On an application for probate of the will of 1901 as contained in the draft, the consent of each of the next of kin who were all sui juris having been obtained to the application, the ct. made an order as prayed.—In the Estate of IRVIN (1908), 25 T. B. & his heirs. By a second codicil of Mar. 17, 1737, reciting he had been advised the devise of his lands was void, gives his personal to the same charitable uses, & his real estate to deft. M. B. The Mortmain Act passed in 1736, & testator died Feb. 8, 1738. On a case stated for the opinion of the ct. of K. In 1896 he executed a fresh will, & revoked the will of 1895, & later in 1896 he executed two codicils, but the settled funds were not mentioned in any of the documents of 1896.

In order to satisfy those words the intention must appear on the face of the codicil, either by express words referring to a will as revoked & importing an intention to revive the same, or by a disposition of testator's property inconsistent with any other intention, or by some other expression conveying to the mind of the ct. reasonable certainty the existence of the intention. In 1878 he executed a holograph will, at the foot or end of the will of 1873, in these terms: "I hereby revoke the above will in its entirety, declaring all its provisions null & void, & constitute my wife sole heiress & extrix. of any property I may die possessed of."

In 1882 testator executed a further testamentary document, as follows: "I declare this to be a codicil to my last will.

I hereby confirm my said will in all respects, & particularly the appointment therein of my wife as guardian of my infant children, & I hereby appoint my sister L. C. G., guardian of my infant children after the death of my said wife":—Held: the word "confirm" in the codicil, coupled with the reference to the guardianship of the infant children, no mention of which was made in the revocative second will, was sufficient to revive the earlier will of 1873 as against the second will of 1878, & probate should go of the will of 1873 & the codicil of 1882, as together constituting the true last wishes of deceased.—In the Goods of VAN CUTSEM (1890), 63 L. The will of 1877 affected a portion only of the will of 1873. By the will of 1881 she revoked all previous wills, & appointed deft. in the present action her sole residuary legatee. This fund had actually been dealt with by the will of 1873 only:—Held: (1) there was not a sufficient reference to the will of 1873 to incorporate it, deeming that the mind of testatrix was confused between the fund she had bequeathed by will & the fund she had appointed by deed; (2) parol evidence was not under the circumstances admissible to explain her intention.—PATON v. ORMEROD, [1892] P. 247; 61 L. There were no other bequests to Dr. B. mentioned in his testamentary writings:—Held: the reference in the codicil of Nov. 11, 1907 to "any legacy mentioned" in testator's will & codicils did not have the effect of restoring the revoked bequest of the £5,000 to Dr. B.—LOTHIAN'S TRUSTEES v. BACK, [1918] S. 2022 i. Mistake in reference—Effect of.]—Testatrix died on Jan. 2, 1914, possessed of considerable property. On her death three instruments of a testamentary character were discovered dated respectively Feb. 27, 1911, Aug. 29, 1912, & Dec. 19, 1913. Each of the two first-mentioned instruments purported to be her last will, & the third to be a codicil. The codicil opened by declaring it "to be a codicil to my will which bears date Feb. 27, 1911." The contents of the codicil however were referable to the second instrument. There being a reference to a specific bequest in such instrument:—Held: the date mentioned in the codicil must be rejected, & the codicil did not in consequence revive the first instrument, which was not admissible for probate.—Re RHODES (1914), 34 N. codicil to the will of 1858, held that the words "bearing date Feb. 14, 1856," as they were merely words of description, might be disregarded, upon the principle "falsa demonstratio non nocet si de corpore constat," & granted probate of the will & codicil of Nov. 10, 1858, & of the codicil of 1861.—In the Goods of WHATMAN (1864), 34 L. 2025. —— ——.]—Testator died leaving a will revoking all former wills. He subsequently executed a codicil, which by mistake he described as a codicil to a previous will; the ct. on the authority of In the Goods of Steele, No. 1995, ante, admitted the later will & codicil to probate.—In the Goods of LAW (1869), 21 L. T. 399; 33 J. P. 808.

2026. —— ——.]—Testator executed a will on Feb. 13, 1864, & another, on June 24, 1865, revoking all former wills. He afterwards executed a codicil, which purported to be a codicil to his will dated Feb. 13, 1864, & after devising some property confirmed his said will. The solr. who prepared the codicil had inserted the date of the first will under the supposition that it was the last will. There was nothing in the codicil which showed an intention to revive the first will:—Held: the second will & codicil were entitled to probate.—In the Goods of ANDERSON (1870), 39 L. J. 2027. —— ——.]—A codicil referring to a previous will by its date does not necessarily revive the will referred to.

Testatrix made a will & afterwards a codicil in the year 1876, & subsequently revoked the will & codicil of 1876 by a will in 1877. Afterwards she wished to make a codicil to the will of 1877, but by mistake, called it in the instrument a codicil to the will of 1876:—Held: the mistake, if clearly proved, did not revive the will of 1876, but was a codicil to the will of 1877.—In the Goods of INCE (1877), 2 P. The solrs. who drew the first will & codicil & the last codicil knew nothing of the existence or eexecution of the intermediate will & codicil until after the death:—Held: the first will & codicil were not revived by the last codicil.—In the Goods of TURNER (1891), 64 L. T. 805.

2030. —— ——.]—Testatrix executed a will in 1887, & a subsequent will in 1889 by which she revoked all previous wills. In 1891 she executed a codicil which by mistake was described as a codicil to the will of 1887:—Held: probate might be granted of the codicil together with the will of 1889 with the reference to the will of 1887 omitted.—In the Goods of GORDON (LADY ISABELLA), [1892] P. 228; 61 L. 2031. —— ——.]—Testator executed a will in 1883. His wife died in Aug. 1884, & in Nov. 1884, he executed a fresh will. In Oct. 1890, testator handed to his solr. a document, which the solr. understood to be the last will, & testator requested that a codicil should be prepared. This was accordingly done, & appended to the document in question & duly executed. In 1895 a second codicil was duly executed on the same document.

After testator's death it was discovered that the codicils had been appended to & made to refer to the document which was, in fact, the revoked will of 1883.

The ct., upon motion, allowed the words of misdescription in the codicils to be omitted from the probate, &, with such omissions, granted probate of the two codicils, & of the will of 1884, as together constituting the true testamentary intentions & dispositions of deceased.—In the Goods of SNOWDEN (1896), 75 L. T. 279.

2032. —— ——.]—Testatrix in 1889 made a will, & in 1892 instructed her solr. to prepare a codicil, which she took away with her, but never executed. Later in 1892 she executed a fresh will, prepared by a different solr., revoking the former will. In 1893 she executed a codicil, prepared by her original solr., who was in ignorance of the existence of the second will, & believed that the codicil to the first will had been duly executed; this codicil purported to be a second codicil to the will of 1889, & to confirm "my said will & the first codicil thereto":—Held: the codicil, by its language, revived the earlier will, & both the wills together with the codicil, must be admitted to probate.—In the Goods of CHILCOTT, [1897] P. 223; 66 L. J. P. 108; 77 L. T. 372; 46 W. R. 32; 13 T. L. R. 378.

2033. —— ——.]—(1) Where testator refers by mistake in a codicil to a will, which has not only been revoked but actually destroyed at the time of the execution of such codicil, the ct. may, if satisfied that such reference is a pure mistake & that testator intended to refer to an existing will, grant probate of the codicil, omitting the words of reference which have been inserted by mistake. But it is otherwise if the will referred to by mistake is in existence at the time of the execution of the codicil.

Testator executed a will on Jan. 10, 1895, with two codicils thereto later on in the same year. In 1898 he executed his last will, with one codicil thereto in 1899, & another in 1900. In the codicil of 1900 he referred to his will "dated Jan. 10, 1895." There was evidence that this was a mistake, & that the reference should have been to the will of 1898; & that the wills & codicils of 1895, which had been duly revoked by the will of 1898, had been destroyed by testator at the time of its execution. The ct. admitted the will of 1898 & the two codicils thereto to probate, omitting from the second codicil the reference to the will of Jan. 10, 1895.

(2) Semble: if the will of Jan. 10, 1895, had been in existence & not destroyed at the time of the execution of the codicil of 1900, the reference to it in that codicil, although inserted by mistake, would have operated as a revival.—In the Goods of READE, [1902] P. 75; 71 L. J. P. 45; 86 L. T. 258.

2034. —— ——.]—Testator made a will in 1909 which he left in the custody of his solr., & he made another will in 1912 which he retained in his own custody. In 1916 he instructed his solr. to prepare a codicil, & in accordance with these instructions the solr., having found the will of 1909 & supposing it to be the last will, prepared a codicil which contained the words "This is a codicil to my last will dated Dec. 18, 1909," & which revoked the appointment of the exors. named in the will of 1909.

Testator duly executed the codicil.

An exor. propounded the will of 1909, with the codicil, alleging that the codicil revived the will of 1909 & thereby revoked the will of 1912, & testator's widow, as an extrix., propounded the will of 1912 with the codicil:—Held: there was nothing to show an intention on the part of testator to revive by the codicil the will of 1909, & the codicil was intended to be a codicil to the will of 1912, & as the will of 1912 had been duly executed the ct. pronounced for the will of 1912 together with the codicil, omitting from the latter the words relating to the will of 1909 & the exors. appointed under that will.—JANE v. JANE (1917), 33 T. Therefore, the will of a married woman, made in 1869 with the assent of her husband, was held not to be revived by republication after his death, & held further, that whatever support, authority, or efficacy the will might have derived from the husband's concurrence was extinguished by his death.—NOBLE v. PHELPS (1871), L. The animus revocandi must be very clearly established otherwise the last dated will uncancelled must remain in force (SIR JOHN NICOLL).—STRIDE v. COOPER (1811), 1 Phillim. 334; 161 E. R. 1002.

B. Re-Execution of Will.

2042. General rule.]—A married woman having a power of appointment made a will whereby she appointed the property subject to the power & all other, if any, property over which she had any power of disposition. After her husband's death, she signed, in the presence of two witnesses, a paper which contained no reference to her will, but merely stated that certain specific property was a present to X., & after her death this paper was admitted to probate together with her will:—Held: this subsequent testamentary instrument did not constitute a republication of the will, & testatrix was intestate as to her property, not being separate property or within the power, other than that portion of it specifically mentioned in the instrument.

Apart from any statutory requirements, it has long been settled that a will may be republished either by a re-execution of it, or by a codicil, & according to the notes to Duppa v. Mayo (1669), 1 Saund. 278 (6th Edit. 1845), "anything which showed an intent that the will should be of a subsequent date, was a sufficient republication." The reference to the will involved in calling the subsequent instrument a codicil to it shows such an intention, & the codicil would amount to a republication of the will. The learned author of Williams on Executors, MR. JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, says, 7th Edit. vol. i. p. 211: "A codicil will amount to a republication of the will to which it refers, whether the codicil be or be not annexed to the will, or be or be not expressly confirmatory of it; for every codicil is, in construction of law, part of a man's will whether it be so described in such codicil or not; & as such, furnishes conclusive evidence of the testator's considering his will as then existing" (STIRLING, J.).—Re SMITH, BILKE v. ROPER (1890), 45 Ch. Before the delivery she subscribed her name at the foot of the will, & C. & B. subscribed theirs, the latter with the prefix of the word

"exor." A. gave no reason for signing her name, & said nothing to B. & C. about being witnesses to her will:—Held: what took place on May 20, 1861, was not a re-execution of the will, & the will was entitled to probate by virtue of the original execution.—DUNN v. DUNN (1866), L. 2045. Evidence — Sufficiency of proof.] — Testator having, in 1840, duly executed his will, wherein he declared "that all codicils added, if signed by him, after executing that will, should be equally valid as if placed in the body of that same will," wrote, on the fourth side of the paper, & signed two testamentary papers, entitled "Codicil No. 1," & "Codicil No. 2" the first dated two days after the will; in 1843, resigned & re-executed the will, assigning, in a memorandum written thereon, & to the subscribing witnesses, as his reason for such re-execution, that "two of the former witnesses were dead"; &, having made certain alterations in the will, in 1844, again re-signed & re-executed the will, in the presence of the same subscribing witnesses, who deposed to their strong impression & belief that, upon both occasions of re-execution, testator signed the will in their presence after they had subscribed it, & who could not identify any one of the several signatures of deceased appearing on the will, as made or acknowledged in their presence, or depose to the existence of the codicils on the back of the will at the time of either re-execution:—Held: there was not sufficient proof of re-execution, & the will alone pronounced for as originally executed.—OLLIVE v. WEALE (1847), 5 Notes of Cases, 486; 10 L. 2068. —— Substitution of trustees.]—Testator, by will in 1873, devised his freehold cottage & land "now in my own occupation" to trustees for his wife for life. He also gave all his personal estate for the benefit of his wife for life, so that she might have the full benefit of the profits & interest arising from the whole of both his real & personal estate for life. After her death the real estate was to be sold, & the whole proceeds, & also his personal estate, to be divided among his children. Shortly after making his will testator bought two pieces of freehold land adjoining the cottage, & occupied them with it until his death. Testator himself put his grandson apprentice to an haberdasher, & paid £126 with him to his master, & a year afterwards made a codicil to his will, by which he gave some legacies. The question was, whether the £126 for apprenticing him was an ademption pro tanto? The ct. was of opinion, as the £1,000 was not given for this use alone, but for other purposes, & the codicil made after this sum had been so laid out, it was a confirmation of the legacy, & amounted to a republication of the will, & decreed the whole £1,000 to the grandson.—ROOME v. ROOME (1744), 3 Atk. 181; 26 E. 2073. —— —— ——.]—In Acherley v. Vernon, No. 1560, ante, it was held that the effect of a codicil referring to an existing will was not merely to amount to a recognition of that will in the state in which it existed & to the interpretation which it then bore, but that the effect of it was to bring down the date of such will to the date of the codicil, therefore . . . not merely to recognise the existing instrument, but to create a new instrument. That case was followed by other cases which in effect declared that the execution of a codicil is a recognition, & equivalent to a republication of the previously executed will, &, therefore, that you must read the residuary clause contained in the codicil, just as if there had been a republication in the more ordinary form of the will itself. This principle was, at all events, not open perhaps to any great objection so long as there was nothing in the codicil itself inconsistent with that construction. . . . You could not read the clause in the will as contained in the codicil, if you found in that very codicil a clause directly inconsistent with that interpretation (per CUR.).—HUGHES v. HOSKING (1856), 11 Moo. 2074. —— —— Mistake in reference to will.]—Testator, living in Jamaica, by his will devised freehold property to trustees, in trust for A. in tail. Nine years afterwards, being resident in Scotland, he made a codicil, apparently prepared by a writer to the signet. By this, supposing that he had sufficiently referred to the will, he substituted C. for A., & in all other respects confirmed the will. But the codicil did not mention a will : it used the word " settlement " ; but under that word, so describing the will, that there could be no reasonable doubt of the identity of the instrument. Speaking of the estate devised to A. by the will, it was described as an estate to him & " his heirs," instead of using the words used in the will, which created an estate tail only. He devised that C. should take in all respects as if originally named instead of A. :—Held : the codicil was sufficiently connected with the will, so as to enable C. to take instead of A.—MARSHALL v. WEDDERBURN (1829), 8 L. J. O. S. K. B. 157.

2075. —— —— Several codicils to which confirmatory words applicable.]—Testator died, legally domiciled in England, having never had another domicil, leaving, amongst other codicils, one made at Milan, dated Oct. 28, 1838, written in his own handwriting, & signed by him, but not attested.

Another valid codicil made subsequently by same testator contained these words : " I hereby ratify & confirm my will & codicils in every respect " :—Held : there being other codicils to which these words might refer, the Milan codicil was not rendered valid, republished, or incorporated with the valid codicil by these words of reference.

A reference by will or codicil to some other paper will not incorporate such paper with the document referring to it, unless it can be clearly identified ; & a general description of it will be insufficient.—CROKER v. HERTFORD (MARQUESS) (1844), 4 Moo P. 2078. —— ——.]—Where a devise in a will is revoked by a settlement of the property devised, a codicil made after the settlement, purporting to confirm the will in every respect, will operate as a republication of the will, & will, subject to the rights of the persons entitled under the settlement, revive the devise which was revoked by the settlement.

D., by will, in 1821, devised two dwelling-houses to his niece E. in fee. In 1823, on the marriage of E., he made a settlement of the two dwelling-houses on herself, her husband, & issue as therein mentioned, with remainder to his own right heirs, which operated to revoke the devise in his will. In 1826 he made a codicil, confirming the will of 1821 in all matters in which it had not been expressly varied. E. & her husband died without

He made a new will, revoking all previous testamentary instruments, on Nov. 18, 1896, but he revoked this last-mentioned will by tearing it on Jan. 7, 1897. He then (Jan. 15, 1897), made two codicils, one republishing the will of Oct. 21, 1895, written on the same sheet of paper as that will, & referring to it as " my above-written will," & the other, stated to be a codicil to the will of Oct. 21, 1895, making a few different bequests, but in all respects confirming the same :—Held : the codicil of Oct. 31, 1895, was not republished.—FRENCH v. HOEY, [1899] 2 I. By a codicil, made after the passing of the Customs & Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (c. 8), he made certain dispositions, & in all other respects confirmed his will.

Testator died in 1892. H. died in 1900; & thereupon estate duty & succession duty became payable in respect of the annuities given to her children, & the question arose who was liable to pay the same:—Held: the effect of the codicil was to republish the will as from the date of the codicil.—Re RAYER, RAYER v. RAYER, [1903] 1 Ch. 685; 72 L. The settlor afterwards acquired four freeholds in Kent that came within the covenant. The settlor by his will, which was executed after the two first freeholds had been acquired by him, confirmed the settlement, & declared that the benefits under the will were to be in addition to those under the settlement. After acquiring the last two freeholds the testator executed two codicils, in each of which he confirmed his will:—Held: by confirming the settlement in his will & directing that the benefits under the settlement & will should be cumulative testator had declared in his lifetime that the trustees of the settlement were entitled to the first two freeholds & that he, the testator, held them on the trusts of the settlement, & by confirming his will in the two codicils he republished his will at the dates of the codicils, & so made the same declaration with regard to the two freeholds last acquired, & therefore the exors. of the will were entitled to assure to the present trustees of the settlement the freeholds aforesaid.—Re NORTHCLIFFE, ARNHOLZ v. HUDSON, [1925] Ch. 651; 95 L. The effect, of all these decisions is to give an operation to the codicil per se, & independently of any intention, so as to bring down the will to the date of the codicil, making the will speak as of that date, unless indeed a contrary intention be shown, in which case it will repel that effect. In my opinion, then, when it is said a codicil republishing a will, or confirming a will, makes the will speak from the time of republication, that does not mean that you are to read the will in any way different from the mode in which it would have been read if testator had died the moment after he had executed it.

You do republish it so as to make it operate from that other later time, & if there be any legal effect that is brought to operate by what has taken place in the meantime, you have the benefit of that (LORD CRANWORTH, V.-C.).—STILWELL v. MELLERSH (1851), 20 L. J. Ch. 356.

Testator made seven codicils to his will, the last of which was made in July, 1898. In that codicil he stated that his brother was dead, but he did not revoke the bequest to him, or the general bequest of personalty, though he made some alterations in his will & the previous codicils. In other respects testator confirmed his will as altered by the prior codicils.

In Apr. 1898, testator entered into a contract for the purchase of a rentcharge issuing out of leasehold property in England. Testator died in Aug. 1898. At that time the contract had not been completed:—Held: inasmuch as the will & codicils must be read together, & the will treated as if made at the date of the last codicil, it could not be taken that testator had excepted chattels real from the general bequest merely for the purpose of giving them to his brother, but they were excepted for all purposes.—Re FRASER, LOWTHER v. FRASER, [1904] 1 Ch. 726; 73 L. 2104. ——.]—Hitherto I have dealt with the matter quite apart from the codicil; but the suggestion is that, the codicil having been made after the marriage, & confirming the will, I must treat the will as having for all purposes been made at the date of the codicil, & that therefore the condition can only refer, not to the first marriage, but to a subsequent marriage; & that, inasmuch as the son never did marry again after the death of the first wife, to whose marriage the father had consented, there is an intestacy, since there has been no such marriage as is contemplated by the will so read. It is perfectly clear, on the cases quoted by counsel for the parties entitled on an intestacy, that for many purposes the republication of a will may affect the property to which a devise or bequest in the will applies; but I do not think any of the authorities quoted go to this length, that for all purposes in construing it I must treat the will as having been made at the date of the codicil (PARKER, J.).—Re PARK, BOTT v. CHESTER, [1910] 2 Ch. 322; 79 L. 2108. ——.]—An ante-nuptial settlement of personal estate gave the survivor of husband & wife, in the events which happened, "after the decease of the other of them," a testamentary power of appointment among their children. During the life of the wife the husband made a will containing a residuary devise & bequest in favour of his children of all property he "might be possessed of or over which he might have power of bequest or disposal" at the time of his death. After the death of his wife the husband made a codicil confirming his will:—Held: though he 2109. Effect on liability of personal estate—For payment of debts secured on realty or chattels real—Republication of will made before Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (c. 113).]—A will executed before Jan. 1, 1855, is a will already made within the meaning of above Act, notwithstanding it does not come into operation by the death of testator till after that day. Nor will a mere republication by codicil, giving no new operation to the material dispositions in the will, deprive it of the character of a will already made. Therefore, where testator, by his will dated before Jan. 1, 1855, devised real estate, which was then subject to certain mtges., to T. P. in fee, & after that day made a codicil which did not affect or refer to the devise:—Held: the devisee was entitled to have the devised estate exonerated out of the personalty.—ROLFE v. PERRY (1863), 3 De G. 2110. ·]—Testator, who at the date of his will in 1912 was the owner of several freehold properties, one of which was subject to a mtge., & of leasehold & other personal estate, gave & bequeathed all the freehold & leasehold properties of which he might die possessed upon trusts in favour of certain of his grandchildren & great grandchildren, & the residue of his estate upon trust for sale & conversion; he then directed that his trustees should out of the moneys thereby produced pay (inter alia) his debts & legacies, & should out of the residue of such moneys pay & discharge "any sums of money secured on mtge. of any of my said freehold & leasehold properties," & should stand possessed of the residue of such moneys in trust to divide the same as therein mentioned.

After the date of his will testator paid off the mtge. & took a reconveyance of the mtged. property.

Shortly before his death, in June & October, 1917, testator contracted to purchase certain freehold properties, in respect of which he paid deposits, leaving balances of the purchase-moneys owing to the respective vendors.

On Dec. 23, 1917, testator made a final codicil, by which, after revoking the appointment of one of his exors. & bequeathing a legacy, he confirmed his will in all other respects.

Testator died on Dec. 26, 1917, without having completed the purchases or paid the balances of the purchase-moneys; & shortly after his death his exors. completed the purchases & paid the balances of the purchase-moneys; whereupon the question arose whether, as between the persons claiming under testator's will, those balances ought to be borne by the freehold properties of testator in respect of which the same were payable, or ought to be satisfied out of his residuary estate:—Held: the confirmation of the will by the last codicil thereto, although executed after the mtge. on testator's freehold property had been paid off & after the vendors' lien had arisen, had not the effect of extending the meaning of the words, "any sums of money secured on mtge. of any of my freehold & leasehold properties so as to include the balances of unpaid purchase-moneys in question.—Re BEIRNSTEIN, BARNETT v. BEIRNSTEIN, [1925] Ch. 12; 94 L. 2115. ——.]—Testator duly executed his will & subsequently a codicil in which he confirmed his will. On his death the will was found with several passages scored out in pencil, & before those passages the word "query" in the handwriting of deceased. There was evidence to show that the alterations were made before the execution of the codicil, & that when he executed it he had not the will before him nor made any reference to it. The ct. being satisfied that the alterations were intended by testator to be deliberative, not final, excluded them from the probate.

This ct. will adhere to the doctrine which has been laid down in many cases, that where a codicil reaffirms a will the effect is that it gives validity to the testamentary dispositions to be found in that document. But it thus validates the dispositions which are to be collected from the document as it stood at the time of the execution of the codicil, & not as it stood at any previous period (LORD PENZANCE).—In the Goods of HALL (1871), L. 2131. Whether revival of adeemed or satisfied bequest.]—One great objection is from that general direction in the codicil, that the will should stand, but that cannot operate in the extent the specific legatees would take ; for it cannot operate to make good a legacy adeemed. A lapsed legacy by devisee's dying in life of testator could not be made good by such direction in a codicil, nor by parity of reason could a legacy adeemed, which is as much gone as a legacy lapsed. If it could not operate in contradiction to the operation of law, much less can it in contradiction to the acts of testatrix. Then the direction amounts to this : that the will shall stand so far as not contradicted by the codicil or other acts done by me ; it does not operate by way of analogy to republication which it is improperly called (per CUR.).—DRINKWATER v. FALCONER (1755), 2 Ves. It being proved by parol evidence that testator intended the provision made by the settlement to be in lieu of a legacy given by the will, the settlement was held to be a satisfaction of the legacy, though the two provisions differed so much from each other that they could not be considered substantially the same.

Testator, some years after the date of his will, took an assignment of the original lease, which comprised numbers 62 & 65 as well as 63 & 64; & a few months afterwards made a codicil by which he confirmed his will. He subsequently made another codicil which was in part as follows: "I also give, subject to her life-estate, one moiety of the residue of my estate, unto & amongst my nephews & nieces living at my decease, payable in like manner as, by my will, is directed concerning their shares & interests in the reversion of my houses in Gower Street, except that their shares & interests in the moiety is to depend solely on the decease of my extrix." D. & all testator's half-brothers & half-sisters died before the suit was commenced:—Held: though the bequest in the will of numbers 63 & 64 was adeemed by testator taking an assignment of the original lease, the effect of the last-mentioned codicil was to entitle the children of testator's half-brothers & half-sisters who were living at the decease of the survivor of them to testator's interest in numbers 63 & 64, as it existed at his death.—PORTER v. SMITH (1848), 16 Sim. 251; 12 Jur. 931; 60 E. 2148. —— Republication to give effect to alterations—No reference to intermediate instrument.]—Testator, having duly executed his will, revoked all other wills, executed a codicil to it, & subsequently re-executed the will without referring to the codicil. There was nothing to show that he intended to revoke the codicil & the wording of the second attestation clause warranted the inference that the object of the re-execution of the will was to give effect to certain alterations in it:—Held: the codicil was not revoked.—In the Goods of RAWLINS (1879), 48 L. 2149. Whether republished.]—Testator by his will, duly attested after devising his estate C. to his son J. in fee devised all his estate O. to two trustees, whom he named as his exors., & their heirs, directing them to sell it; having afterwards sold his estate C. & purchased another, A., he by a codicil written on the back of the will, attested by two witnesses only, directed that the money obtained from the sale of the estate C. should go to a general fund, to be divided amongst all his children & also that the estate A. should be sold, & its produce applied in like manner; & he appointed his wife an extrix. jointly with those named in the will. By a second codicil, also attested by two witnesses only, he after stating that one-half of the estate O. had been sold & giving directions as to the sale of the other half, appointed new exors. in lieu of those named in the will; subsequently he made a third codicil, duly attested to pass lands, by which he merely appointed another exor. in the room of one of those in the second codicil named; all the codicils were written on the back sheet of the will:—Held: the third codicil operated as a republication of the first codicil.—GUEST v. WILLASEY (1826), 3 Bing. 614; 12 Moore, C. 2150. ——.]—Testator having estates in Jamaica & England, by his will, directed his English estates to be sold & £10,000 to be paid out of the produce to pltf. He afterwards sold his English estates, & by an unattested codicil recited that he had so done, & directed that, notwithstanding, the £10,000 should be paid to pltf., & charged all his estates with the payment thereof. He then made another codicil which was duly attested, & in which he referred to his will & ratified & confirmed all the provisions & bequests which he had thereby made in pltf.'s favour:—Held: the Jamaica estates were liable to the payment of the £10,000.—GORDON v. REAY (LORD) (1832), 5 Sim. 274; 58 E. 2151. ——.]—Testator gave all his property to trustees, & declared that he had made no provision for his granddaughter, K. H., because her deceased father had, in his lifetime, received more than his other children would become entitled to under his will. He then declared trusts of an equal share of his property for each of his surviving children for their lives, with remainders to their children. He then made a codicil as follows: "My dear daughters, is that you do give my dear granddaughter, K. H., £1,000, & that you will be kind to E. S. & it is my desire that you do give her some part of my table linen & sheeting. This is my last wish." By a subsequent codicil, he made some alteration in the bequest made by his will, in favour of one of his daughters, &, subject thereto, confirmed his will:—Held: the second codicil confirmed the first, as being part of the will, & the concluding sentence of the first codicil was sufficient to create a bequest of the £1,000 to K. H., & as the articles specifically given by it to E. S. passed, by the will, to the trustees, & not to the daughters, so the £1,000 was to be paid, not by the daughters out of their life interests, but by the trustees, out of testator's general personal estate.—HINXMAN v. POYNDER (1832), 5 Sim. 546; 58 E. 2155. ——.]—A. B., by his will dated in 1828, & attested by three witnesses, gave to C. D. an annuity of £20, which he charged upon his real & personal estate; by a codicil dated in 1831, & attested by two witnesses only, he revoked the annuity given by his will, & gave to the wife of C. D. an annuity or clear yearly rentcharge of £70 with a power of entry & distress over his real estate in case the annuity should be in arrear, & testator ratified & confirmed his will in all other particulars. A. B. afterwards made another codicil, dated in 1831, & executed in the presence of three witnesses, & thereby, after referring to the first codicil & making certain alterations in the disposition of his property, ratified & confirmed his will:—Held: the annuity given by the first codicil was well charged upon the real estate.

2157. —— Draft codicil.] — Testator duly executed a will & five codicils. The first executed codicil, dated Mar. 25, 1848, commenced, "This is the second codicil to the will of A.," & ended, "In all other respects I confirm my said will, save only so far as the same is unrevoked by my first codicil thereto, & I do hereby confirm the said codicil." It did not appear that testator had executed any codicil to his will prior to this one, described as the second codicil to his will; but his solr., after the date of the will, & before the date of this codicil, forwarded to him for his perusal a draft codicil, which, when he prepared this codicil, he erroneously concluded had been executed, & therefore described it as a second codicil. The draft codicil was, after testator's death, found tied up in a parcel containing the will & five executed codicils:—Held: the draft codicil was not sufficiently identified as the paper intended to be referred to by deceased in his first executed codicil, & could not be admitted to probate.—In the Goods of ALLNUTT (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 167; 33 L. J. P. M. & A. 86; 9 Jur. N. S. 581; 164 E. R. 1237.

2158. —— Mistake in reference.]—Testator executed a will & five codicils. The fourth codicil revoked the three first, & the fifth, after making an alteration in the will, in all other respects confirmed the "said will & four codicils":—Held: there was sufficient ambiguity on the face of the codicils to render parol evidence admissible for the purpose of explaining it; & as it appeared by such evidence, that testator intended to confirm his will & fourth codicil only, & that by mistake of the copyist of the draft will the words "four codicils" had been substituted in the engrossment for the words "fourth codicil," the will & fourth & fifth codicils only were entitled to probate.—In the Goods of THOMSON (1865), L. 2159. ——.]—A codicil, which refers to a will of a particular date, & does not refer to a subsequent codicil, does not operate as a republication of that subsequent codicil.

Testator made a will, dated before the Wills Act, by which he directed his residuary real estate to be sold & the proceeds to be divided, in the events which happened, among twelve persons of whom A. & B. were two. He made a first codicil, dated after Wills Act, by which he directed certain real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will to be sold, & the proceeds divided in the same way as the proceeds of his other real estate. This codicil was attested by A. & B. He then made another codicil, described as a codicil to his will of a certain date, but not referring to the prior codicil:—Held: the second codicil did not operate as a republication of the first codicil; the gifts to A. & B. of two twelfth shares of the proceeds of the property comprised in the first codicil failed; & these shares fell into the residue, & were divisible between A. & B. & the other ten residuary legatees.—BURTON v. NEWBERY (1875), 1 Ch. 2160. ——.]—Where testator by a codicil confirms his will, the will together with all previous codicils is taken to be confirmed. Testatrix by her will gave shares in her residue to her nephew. By a codicil she revoked all devises & bequests to her nephew. By a second codicil she devised certain after-purchased property to the trustees of her will & confirmed her will:—Held: the second codicil did not revoke the first, & the after-purchased property went according to the will & first codicil together, & not according to the will alone.

Testator afterwards acquired a renewal of the lease &, at a later date, having added a codicil to his will, confirmed his will in all other respects. This summons was taken out by the trustees to determine whether the bequest in the will to the daughter "of all my interest in my present lease of No. 1, Chesterfield Street" was a bequest of the renewed lease:—Held: by the use of the words "in all other respects I confirm my will" testator had brought down the date of the will to the date of the codicil, & so made the bequest in the will operate in the same way as it would have done if the words in the will had been contained in the codicil of later date. On June 10, 1890, he made a codicil, which did not in terms refer to the specifically devised property, but expressly confirmed his will. On the same day, but whether before or after the execution of the codicil was not known, he granted a lease of the specifically devised property, with an option of purchase to the lessee. After testator's death the lessee exercised his option by purchasing the property. Upon a summons raising the question whether the purchase-money belonged to the specific devisee or fell into residue:—Held: whether the codicil was executed before or after the lease, testator must have known of the existence of the latter, & by confirming his will had indicated a sufficient intention to pass whatever estate he had in the property to his devisee.—Re PYLE, PYLE v. PYLE, [1895] 1 Ch. 724; 64 L. Whatever might be the construction upon the will alone, yet taking both the will & codicil together, it is clear that this restriction applies to any future as well as a present husband (BULLER, J.).—BEABLE v. DODD (1786), 1 Term Rep. 193; 99 E. R. 1047.

This case must be decided according to the intention of testator, as that intention is to be collected from the several parts of the will & the codicil taken together. Now it is impossible to read them without seeing that the word "W . . ." was written in the codicil instead of the word "N . . ." in reciting in the codicil what he had given by his will, testator made that evident mistake (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—SKERRATT v. OAKLEY (1798), 7 Term Rep. 492; 101 E. 2193. ——.]—Testator, by his will, made in the year 1820, gave & bequeathed to his daughter Mary, her exors., administrators, & assigns, certain leaseholds, for life; &, from & after her decease, he gave & bequeathed the same "unto & amongst the lawful issue of his daughter Mary, equally, share & share alike, with benefit of survivorship; &, in default of such issue, he gave & bequeathed the same unto his son George, for his natural life, &, after his decease, to his children equally, share & share alike, with the benefit of survivorship." He afterwards made a codicil, which contained a recital that he had by his will given & bequeathed the leaseholds to his son George "after the decease of his daughter Mary, & in default of her leaving lawful issue," & then went on to provide, that, in the event of his son not indemnifying his estate from a liability he testator had incurred on his account, all the bequests to his son, but so far as concerned the son only, should be revoked:—Held: interpreting the will by the codicil, the gift over in the former, "in default of such issue," being capable of importing a bequest over on failure of issue living at the death, it must be inferred from the latter that testator employed it in that sense, inasmuch as in the codicil he referred to it as if it were a gift over in default of his daughter's leaving issue, which, as regards personalty, is tantamount to a gift over on failure of issue living at the death; & consequently, that, assuming the limitation in the will, if it stood alone, would have conferred an absolute interest on the daughter, upon the true construction of the will & codicil taken together, such gift was subject to a good executory bequest over in favour of the children of testator's son.

The argument with respect to the effect of the codicil when rightly considered is not that the will is at all revoked or varied by the codicil, but rather that, the will & codicil being all one testament, the language of the will may be interpreted by that of the codicil (JERVIS, C.J.).—DARLEY v. MARTIN (1853), 13 C. Testator by will devised real estate in favour of certain persons, & bequeathed certain chattels in trust to be held & enjoyed as heirlooms by the persons for the time being entitled to the real estate "under the devise thereof hereinbefore contained." estate, &, as to the legacy of " £20,000 to trustees," merely put, in the codicil, opposite to those words the words " the same." The codicil, which contained no reference to the chattels, ended with the words " except as here intimated, I confirm my will " :—Held: the will & codicil ought to be construed as one disposition, & the will manifested an intention to unite the enjoyment of the chattels & legacy with the possession of the real estate, which intention, there being nothing in the codicil to indicate any alteration of it, ought to have effect given to it, & as regarded the chattels, the mere use by testator in the will of the words " under the devise thereof hereinbefore contained " ought not to be allowed to defeat that primary intention; & as regarded the legacy, the meaning of the words " the same " in the codicil must be taken to be that the legacy was to be dealt with as if the words in which it was given by the will had been in terms repeated in the codicil.—Re TOWRY'S SETTLED ESTATE, DALLAS v. TOWRY (1889), 41 Ch. By a codicil testator stated that, in consequence of the nervous debility of his daughter, his will was that she should not marry; & in case of her marriage or death, he directed that his trustees should hold his residuary estate in trust for the persons mentioned in the gift over in the will.

After the death of testator the daughter married, & in a suit to administer his estate the judge decided in 1843 that the limitation over contained in the codicil, being general restraint of marriage, was void as regarded the daughter's life interest, & that she was entitled to the income during her life. She died in 1894, leaving children:—Held: the will & codicil must be construed together; the true construction was that the property was to go over upon the marriage or death of the daughter, whichever should first happen; & as it could not, as had been already decided, go over upon her marriage, the daughter's children were entitled to the fund.—MORLEY v. RENNOLDSON, [1895] 1 Ch. 449; 64 L. The cousin of testatrix was, at the date of the will, married to his first wife, & she died in Jan. 1901. In Nov. 1901, testatrix, with knowledge of the death of her cousin's first wife, made a codicil to her will, in which she made a bequest of a sum of stock & appointed a residuary legatee. The codicil contained no reference to the bequest of £5,000. In 1903 the cousin of testatrix remarried. He died in 1924. There was no issue of either marriage. This summons raised the question whether the second wife was entitled to benefit under the bequest of £5,000:—Held: the will & codicil must be read together, & the second wife was entitled to an interest in the £5,000 for her life or until remarriage.—Re HARDYMAN, TEESDALE v. MCCLINTOCK, [1925] Ch. 287; 94 L. By a codicil in 1803, testator after reciting that he had by his will given the reversion in fee of the property, expectant on the decease of M. " without issue of her body," to A., declared that if A. died without issue before the estate became " vested " in him by virtue of the limitations aforesaid, he gave it to other persons:—Held: the daughters of Mary took life estates only, the word " moiety " in the will not being sufficient to pass to them the fee, & neither the gift over, " in default of such issue," nor the recital in the codicil, being sufficient to enlarge the previous gift.

If the construction of a devise or bequest contained in the will is ambiguous, the expression of testator in a codicil as to the way in which he understands or construes his own words is conclusive & must be followed, but if testator, in the codicil, recites that in his will he has made a devise or bequest that does not there appear, then the codicil does not, by such recital, create that bequest or devise (ROMILLY, M.R.).—Re ARNOLD'S ESTATE (1863), 33 Beav. 163; 9 L. did not amount to a gift of a life estate in the £1,000 which remained unrevoked.

Where you find a recital that a particular person is entitled under another instrument, that does not in general amount to a gift by the instrument which contains the recital, because testator, supposing the interest already to exist, cannot intend by that instrument to create it; but where testator says in any testamentary instrument that he has by that very document made a particular gift; there the ct. will lay hold of this as conclusive evidence of an intention to confer such bounty, & will give to the erroneous recital the effect of an actual gift (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re SMITH (1862), 2 John. & H. 594; 70 E. Testatrix by her will gave all her property upon trust for her niece for life, & after her death to divide the same equally between the brothers & sisters of the niece living at her decease, & A., B., & C. in equal shares, "& should either be dead leaving children, such children are to take the share their deceased parent would have been entitled to if living."

By a codicil testatrix recited that by her will she had directed her estate to be divided between the persons therein named, & declared that she desired a certain great-niece to have a share equally with the others named in the will, & bequeathed the same to her accordingly.

A. & B. stood in the same degree of relationship to testatrix, but C. was a stranger in blood. A. predeceased both testatrix & the tenant for life. B. survived testatrix, but predeceased the tenant for life:—Held: interpreting the will by the recital in the codicil, the estates went, not in moieties between the brothers & sisters of the tenant for life on the one hand, & the named persons on the other, but equally between them all.—Re VENN, LINDON v. INGRAM, [1904] 2 Ch. 52; 73 L. 2204. —— Although not duly attested.]—Testator by his will devised & bequeathed certain freehold & leasehold property at B. as follows: "I give unto my beloved wife, Maria, the five shares of the freehold & leasehold messuages or tenements in the city of Bath, which belong to me, & which formed part of the property of her father, Mr. William Cross, deceased, for her sole use & benefit; & I beg & request that at her death she will give & bequeath the same or such shares as she shall think proper unto such members of her own family, as she shall think most deserving of the same." There was a gift in similar terms of some money in the funds, & other personal property to the wife, with a like request, but in these words: "That at her death she will give & bequeath what shall be remaining, in such sums as she shall think proper, unto such members of her own & my family, that she shall think most deserving & entitled to the same." Testator, in Mar. 1836, made a codicil in his will giving his wife the residue of his property; but the codicil was attested by only two witnesses. The wife survivied, & by her will, in 1850, gave the five shares to her five nieces as tenants in common, & a sum of £3,000 to W. & £300 to his son, A.; & she bequeathed the residue of her property to W. By a codicil to her will, she revoked the prior legacies of the five shares, & gave them the question related to the interest of W. under her husband's will, which depended on the prior question, whether she took an absolute interest under her husband's will or only an interest coupled with a trust for his or her family:—Held: she took the fee in the freeholds, & the leaseholds & the personal property absolutely; & they therefore passed by her will & codicil respectively.

The ct. will look at an improperly attested codicil, directed to form part of a will, to arrive at testator's intention, if necessary.—GREEN v. MARSDEN (1853), 1 Drew. 646; 1 Eq. Rep. 437; 22 L. J. Ch. 1092; 22 L. T. O. S. 17; 1 W. R. 511; 61 E. R. 598.

2212. Provision against lapse—Application to legacies given by codicil.]—Testatrix by her will made in 1894 gave a number of specific & pecuniary legacies & disposed of her residuary personal estate, & directed that all bequests & legacies given to married women should be for their separate use, & that "no legacy given by this my will shall lapse by reason of the death of the legatee before me, but shall take effect as if the death of such legatee had happened immediately after my death, & such legacy shall accordingly pass to the legal personal representative of such deceased legatee." Testatrix made seven codicils to her will, each of which contained an express formal clause confirming in other respects her will & any previous codicil or codicils, & died in 1915:—Held: the provision in the will against lapse extended to a bequest contained in a codicil of a leasehold house to W. who predeceased testatrix; the expression "this my will" referring not to the particular instrument, but to the testamentary disposition constituted by the will & codicils at the date of testatrix's death.—Re SMITH, PRADA v. VANDROY, [1916] 2 Ch. 368; 85 L. SECT. 4.—EFFECT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—ON INVALID WILL.

2213. General rule.]—S. M. H. while a married woman made a will which was invalid. Afterwards, when a widow, she executed a document beginning with the words, "this is a codicil to the last will & testament of me." The codicil was written on the same paper as the will & immediately after it, & it was proved that she had made no other will:—Held: the will was incorporated in the codicil. Probate granted of both documents.—In the Goods of HEATHCOTE (1881), 6 P. D. 30; 50 L. J. P. 42; 44 L. T. 280; 45 J. P. 361; 29 W. R. 356.

2214. ——.]—The laws of Jersey are derived from those of Normandy, where the Roman law, including that respecting codicils following the condition of the testament, & being void where the latter is annulled, did not prevail. Where a will was held by the law of Jersey to be null & void by reason of incompetent attestation:—Held: a validly executed codicil did not fall with the will, & the residue disposed of by the codicil included all the legacies given by the will.

In the absence of authority their Lordships have to determine whether it is reasonable that as an absolute rule of law a codicil is dependent on the will, & if the will is void the codicil must fall with it. If testator, by a codicil duly executed, gives a specific legacy, having, in a previous will not duly executed, given other legacies, it does not seem reasonable that his intention expressed in the codicil should not be given effect to because effect cannot be given to the intention expressed in the will (per CUR.).—FALLE v. GODFRAY (1888), 14 App. Cas. 70; 58 L. 2215. 2217. —— Draft will.]—The substance of the draft of a will which is not proved to have been executed or to exist is not incorporated by the execution of a subsequent codicil, referring in terms to a will supposed by the person who draws the codicil to have been validly executed in accordance with what is expressed in the draft will.—EYRE v. EYRE, [1903] P. 131; 72 L. J. P. 45; 88 L. T. 567; 51 W. R. 701; 19 T. L. R. 380.

2218. Will not duly attested.]—A will not duly attested; a further writing, denominated a codicil, duly attested; admitted to probate, not as a will & codicil, but as parts of one continuous will.

I do not know that the ct. has held that a codicil executed in the presence of witnesses has given validity to a paper, without there being reference therein to that paper. It is not, in fact, a republication, but a publication. The difficulty is to know what to do with this case, in which the property is so small. If the property were not so small, I should have no hesitation in directing the paper to be propounded. . . . As the will is signed by deceased, but not duly attested by witnesses, this other writing may be considered, from the manner in which he expresses himself, "I do now further desire," as a continuation of the will; & I pronounce for that writing, with the other, as a continuation of the will of deceased (SIR H. JENNER FUST).—In the Goods of SCRIVEN (1843), 2 Notes of Cases, 152.

2219. ——.]—A. signed a paper intended for her will, in 1851, which was attested by only one witness. In 1856, on the day before her death, she duly executed a codicil "to my last will & testament." The paper of 1851 was not produced at the time the codicil was executed, but was found after A.'s death in a locked chest in her room; the codicil in a drawer. On a view of the two papers, & on the evidence of the circumstances attending the factum of the codicil:—Held: the paper of 1851 was sufficiently identified as the last will & testament referred to by the codicil, & it acquired validity from the due execution of the codicil.—MADDOCK v. ALLEN (1857), Dea. & Sw. 325; 29 L. 2223. —— —— ——.]—S., by her will, bequeathed all her jewels, furniture, etc., to such of her children in such portions as she should by any list signed by herself direct. She subsequently duly executed a codicil in the following words:—"I declare that this writing shall be a codicil to my will." When she executed the codicil there was a list annexed to it in her own writing, but unsigned by her, & expressed to be made for the purpose of carrying out the intentions expressed in her will, disposing of different articles of jewellery, furniture, etc., amongst her children. The ct. granted probate of the will & codicil, but without the list annexed to the codicil.—In the Goods of WARNER (1862), 10 W. R. 566.

2225. —— —— ——.]—Testatrix, the day before undergoing an operation, which ended fatally, wrote two letters; the first, which was addressed to a personal friend, gave directions as to certain articles of plate to which testatrix had affixed the names of various donees, & the second to her exor. In this latter, which was duly attested as a codicil, she mentioned having written the first letter:—Held: the second letter, which constituted a valid codicil, incorporated the first letter, & the first letter incorporated the papers therein referred to.—SYMES v. APPELBE (1887), 57 L. T. 599; 51 J. P. 632.

2226. —— Reference in will—To unattested document—Document in existence at date of codicil.]—Testator by his will bequeathed articles of plate "specified in schedules A. & B. to be annexed to this document" [his will]. Two such schedules, marked A. & B., were found after his death, which, it was sworn, were not written when the will was executed, but were in existence prior to the execution of a subsequent codicil, in which no mention was made of the schedules. Probate was granted of A. & B.

The question is whether unexecuted papers, not having been written when a will was executed, but being in existence prior to a codicil duly executed, in which there is no reference to such unexecuted papers, can be held to be incorporated, & form a part of such will. I know of no precise decision in point; still, I think, probate may pass with the schedules as prayed (per CUR.).—In the Goods of HUNT (1853), 2 Rob. Eccl. 622; 21 L. T. O. 2228. —— —— —— ——.]—M. executed a will in 1848, in which she requested her trinkets to be divided "as I shall direct in a small memorandum." She executed a codicil in 1853, & another in 1862, which amounted to a re-execution of the will. On her death the will & two codicils, & a paper headed "memorandum of trinkets referred to in my will," were found folded together in a locked portfolio. There was no evidence to show that the memorandum was in existence when the will was signed, but there was evidence from which it might be inferred that it was in existence before the date of the last codicil, but the last codicil did not refer to it:—Held: the re-execution of the will by the last codicil could not make that a part of the will which was no part of it before, & the memorandum ought not to form part of the probate.—In the Goods of MATHIAS (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 100; 32 L. 2229. —— —— —— ——.]—The republication of a will by the execution of a codicil will not of itself entitle an unexecuted paper, written or signed between the date of the will & the date of the codicil, to probate. But where the will, if read as speaking at the date of the execution of the codicil, contains language which would operate as an incorporation of the document to which it refers, such document, although not in existence until after the execution of the will, is entitled to probate by force of the codicil.—In the Goods of TRURO (LADY) (1866), L. 2230. —— —— —— ——.]—Where the will, if read as speaking at the date of the execution of the codicil, contains language which would operate as an incorporation of a document to which it refers, such document, although not in existence until after the execution of the will, is entitled to probate by force of the codicil. But where the reference in the will was to a future document, & the language of the codicil, in which the reference was repeated, was ambiguous & might be read as pointing either to an existing or future document, the ct. refused to incorporate unexecuted papers written by testatrix between the date of the will & codicil.—In the Goods of REID (1868), 38 L. 2231. —— —— —— ——.]—Testatrix duly executed her will in 1875, & (inter alia), bequeathed to trustees named in the will all her watches, jewellery, & other personal effects, "upon trust to deliver the same, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease, to such my children & issue as I shall, by any memorandum in writing, purporting to dispose thereof, & signed by me, direct." She subsequently drew up a memorandum, putting the name of the beneficiary against each article, but she did not sign the document. About two months later she made a codicil, by which she confirmed her will, except in so far as it was altered by this codicil. Upon the exors. applying for probate of all three documents, the registrars refused to admit the memorandum, &, upon appeal to the ct.:—Held: they were right, & the memorandum, by reason of its never having been signed, was not incorporated in the will, either by the terms of that document, or by the subsequent execution of the codicil.—In the Goods of MACGREGOR (1889), 60 L. T. 840; 53 J. P. 231.

2232. —— —— —— ——.]—Testator devised property to trustees in trust to provide an annuity of £3,000 for his wife, setting apart certain funds which they would find "noted" by him. He made two codicils confirming the will. After his death a document was found in his handwriting purporting to be instructions to his exors., & containing the words, "The stocks to be set aside to pay my wife the £3,000 per annum," followed by a list of securities, the total income from which was stated at £3,000. The earliest date which could be attributed to this document was after the will, but before the codicils:—Held: as the language of the will did not refer to the document as existing, the codicils had not the effect of incorporating it with the documents of which probate was to be granted.—DURHAM v. NORTHEN, [1895] P. 66; 69 L. T. 691; 10 T. L. R. 49; 6 R. 582.

Annotation:—Folld. In the Goods of Smart, [1902] P. 238.

2233. —— —— —— ——.]—Where a will, if treated as executed on the date of a codicil & read as speaking from that date, contains language which may be taken to refer to a certain document, such document may be incorporated & admitted to probate, although it was not in existence at the date of the execution of the will, provided it came into existence before the date of the execution of the codicil.

Testatrix executed her last will Mar. 28, 1888, together with four codicils thereto dated respectively Aug. 20, 1890, Mar. 17, 1891, June 7, 1893, & May 22, 1894. She died Mar. 4, 1899. In her will of 1888 she referred to a certain "list of articles." After her death a "list of articles" was found in her tin box answering the description in the will of 1888. It was, however, executed as a will in several places, the dates of such executions being respectively Dec. 15, 1890, Apr. 21, 1892, Mar. 21, 1893, & Oct. 1, 1894:—Held: the execution of the codicil of May 22, 1894, republished or re-executed the will of Mar. 28, 1888, which must be taken to speak from the later date, & the will & codicils must be admitted to probate, together with so much of the list of articles as upon examination should be found to have been executed before the date of the last codicil, May 22, 1891.—In the Goods of RENDLE (1899), 68 L. 2234. —— —— —— ——.]—A book or other document referred to in a testamentary paper cannot be incorporated unless it is in existence at the time of the execution of such testamentary paper, & is actually referred to as an existing & not as a future document.

At testator's death the letter was found deposited at a bank with the will & a codicil:—Held: as the will stated that at the time when it was executed the letter was already in existence, & as the letter was found deposited with the will & codicil, the ct. must pronounce for the will & codicil with the incorporation of the letter in the will.—In the Estate of PHILLIPS, BOYLE v. THOMPSON (1918), 34 T. Codicil, reciting the death of W. devised the said annuity to trustees in trust for M. for life, to be raised out of his said plantations & estates, & paid in same manner & with like remedies as directed in favour of W. Second codicil revoked that part of first in which he had given to M. £150 per annum, & instead thereof he gave £20 per annum to M. for life. Third codicil revoked that part of will in which he devised to J. all his estate & property in St. Kitts, & declared the same void, & gave & bequeathed the said property to P. in fee:—Held: the annuity given to M. by the first codicil was not revoked by the last codicil, nor reduced by the second codicil, the second codicil not being executed according to the Stat. By a codicil of the same date he reduced those legacies to £300 & £500 respectively. Afterwards he formally republished his will. By a second codicil, after reciting the bequest in his will of £500 to A., he revoked that bequest, &, in lieu of it, gave A. £300, to be paid at the same time as the revoked bequest was directed by his will. By a third codicil, after reciting that, by his will, he had given to R. £3,000, he reduced that legacy to £2,000; & then directed that the £300 given to A., as well as the £1,000 given to B., should not be paid till twelve months after the death of his wife:—Held: taking all the instruments together, B. was entitled to a legacy of £1,000.—GRAND v. REEVE (1840), 11 Sim. 66; 59 E. 2249. —— ——.]—Testator, by his will, made in 1907, gave the residue of his real & personal estate to " my five children, X., H., F., C. & L., in equal shares as tenants in common." In 1914 H. was adjudicated a bkpt., & by clause 2 of a codicil made in 1915 testator revoked the share of residue given to H. as one of his five children. By clause 3 of the codicil he declared that £500 paid for the benefit of L. was to be taken in part satisfaction of her share of residue as one of his five children " & accordingly that such residue shall be divided between the children entitled to the same in such manner that the share of the said L. shall be less in amount than the shares of my other children by the sum of £500. Subject as aforesaid I confirm my said will " :—Held : although the effect of mere revocation of the gift of a share of residue to H. would be that the share would be undisposed of, this result was prevented by clause 3 of the codicil ; testator was thereby directing that the whole residue was to be divided among the children who were taking title under the will & codicil combined, namely the four named children other than H.—Re WILKINS, WILKINS v. WILKINS, [1920] 2 Ch. 63 ; 89 L. By a codicil, after referring to the death of D., testatrix revoked whatever interest D. had in her will. A., B., & C. survived testatrix:—Held: the gift of survivorship was intended to be general & not confined to the case of only one legatee dying, & in any event the revocation clause of the codicil must be construed as directing the residuary bequest of the will to be read as if D. was not one of the residuary legatees, & consequently, that in the events that had happened D.'s share was not undisposed of, but went to the other legatees.—Re RADCLIFFE, YOUNG v. BEALE (1903), 51 W. W. & F. W. By a codicil he revoked the gifts of the shares in his residuary estate to T. W. & F. attached to the previous legacy, unless there are express words to the contrary.

Testator, by his will, gave his wife an annuity during her widowhood. Eleven years afterwards he made a codicil, & thereby, after reciting that he had made too small a provision for his wife, he gave her, in addition to all other provisions, an annuity of £800 for her life, for her sole & separate use. After testator's death, his widow married again:—Held: the gift in the codicil was not subject to the condition of widowhood, &, therefore, she was not deprived of it by her second marriage.—MAY v. MAY (1871), 19 W. R. 432.

2270. Will dealing with settled property—Acquisition on death of husband of real & personal estate—Codicil devising real estate "having come from" husband.]—Testatrix, a married woman, having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment over some £15,000 worth of securities, & being entitled to jewels & furniture for her separate use, by her will in 1883, in exercise of this power & "of all other powers enabling her in this behalf," appointed, gave, & bequeathed "all the property of whatever nature comprised in the settlement, & over which I have any power of appointment or disposition by will," to trustees upon certain trusts. In Aug. 1885, the husband of testatrix died, & she thereupon became entitled to certain real estate, & had £7,500 worth of personal estate; in Dec. 1885, she made a codicil, by which she devised certain real estate therein referred to as having come to her from her late husband, but which did not otherwise refer to or confirm her will. Testatrix died in 1886:—Held: the will as originally executed was only intended to deal with the property comprised in the settlement, the codicil merely confirmed the will as it originally stood, & in no way enlarged its scope so as to make it include the £7,500 subsequently acquired from her husband, &, as to this amount there was an intestacy.—Re TAYLOR, WHITBY v. HIGHTON (1888), 57 L. J. Ch. 430; 58 L. T. 842; 36 W. R. 683.

2271. Codicil revoking old & making new appointment of trustee & executor—Alteration of bequests to executors in will—Direction that will to be read as if new name inserted.]—By her will testatrix appointed pltf. & B. exors. & trustees, & she gave to each of her trustees a legacy of £500, & also to each of her trustees for the time being £50 per annum so long as any of the trusts therein contained should continue. By a codicil testatrix revoked the appointment of B. as exor. & trustee & the legacy of £500 & the annual allowance, & appointed W. to be exor. & trustee, & gave him a legacy of £50 for his trouble. She further declared that her will should be construed as if the name of W. had been inserted instead of the name of B.:—Held: W. was entitled to the legacy of £50 & to the annuity of £50, but not to the legacy of £500.—Re MELLOR, DODGSON v. ASHWORTH (1912), 28 T. L. R. 473; 56 Sol. Jo. 596.

2272. Codicil referring to former will—Directions for settlement.]—By his will, dated Nov. 29, 1922, testator directed his trustees to hold three-twentieths of his residue upon trust for his sister. By a codicil which was in form a direction to prepare a codicil, testator instructed his solr. to "settle bequest to sister as in a former will but so as to give her a protected life interest equivalent to what is known as an alimentary provision according to Scottish law." The codicil was admittee to probate. The solr. had in his possession only one will of testator, dated Oct. 29, 1920, in which the sister's share was settled:—Held: the instructions given were final & complete, as was shown by testator executing them as a testamentary disposition; there was only one will by reference to which the instructions to prepare a codicil could be carried out—namely, the will dated Oct. 29, 1920, which had been identified as the "former will" by properly admissible evidence; & the effect of the codicil was that the three-twentieths of the residue given to the sister were settled upon the trusts declared of her bequest in the "former will," & on her death devolved upon the trusts declared in that will.—Re WHITE, KNIGHT v. BRIGGS, [1925] Ch. 179; 94 L. 2275. Disposition of real property—Devise—Appointment of particular lands to particular devisee.]—A devise in England is an appointment of particular lands to a particular devisee; & is considered in the nature of a conveyance by way of appointment; & upon that principle it is, that no man can devise lands which he has not at the date of such conveyance (LORD MANSFIELD).—HARWOOD v. GOODRIGHT (1774), 1 Cowp. 87; 98 E. 2276. —— Residuary gift—Gift of specific property.]—If the term "residue" was used by this testator, with reference to what remained, after deducting Gillfoot, before given, the meaning & the construction must be the same as if he had first enumerated all his lands, & then had given Gillfoot, & then had devised all the rest of his enumerated lands. Beyond all doubt, that would have been as specific a devise of the rest, as of Gillfoot, or as if he enumerated all the other parts. It would, indeed, have been so in the case of personalty. Upon this supposition, therefore, the land which passed under the residuary clause was strictly a specific devise (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—MIREHOUSE v. SCAIFE (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 695; 7 L. J. The widow received the money, & invested it in the funds, but treating it as her own, she afterwards sold it out, & applied it to her own use. The answer to this, is, that there is no case in which a person is obliged in equity to carry out such intention, not being testamentary, or imposed as a matter of trust, unless the person to be so charged has been instrumental in causing testator to omit from his will a formal direction providing for its fulfilment (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—PEACE v. HAINS (1853), 11 Hare, 151; 17 Jur. 1091; 68 E. The purchaser sold the hereditaments to two persons, in equal shares, one of whom purchased the share of the other, & was admitted to the whole. C. the legatee of the £400 died, & her exor. filed a bill against the party admitted to the copyholds & against B. praying an account of what was due for 2299. —— —— Payment of annuities.]—Testator devised & bequeathed to his exors. & trustees a lease of a house & premises in which his trading business was carried on, & all the stock-in-trade, fixtures, machinery, utensils, & effects at the time of his death used in the same business, & the goodwill of the same, upon trust to permit his son to carry on the business, & use & occupy the house, premises, & effects "upon the terms & conditions following": that was to say—that he, the son, should, during the joint life of testator's daughter, & widowhood of his widow, pay to each of them an annuity; & after various other provisions he directed that from & after the decease of the wife & daughter in the lifetime of the son, the trustees should execute to the son an assignment of the house, premises, fixtures, machinery, & effects. If the son should cease to carry on business, the above property was to be subject to the trusts of testator's residuary estate, & the son was to be excluded from all benefit under the will. Testator then declared the trusts of residuary personalty in favour of his wife, son, & daughter above mentioned.

A bill having been filed by the sole acting exor. & trustee against the son & daughter for administration, in which it was alleged that the son had made default in payment of the annuities, & an answer having been filed by the son in which he stated that no application had been made to him by the daughter for payment of her annuity, & that it was his intention to pay the annuity bequeathed to testator's wife, the daughter filed the present bill, praying for a declaration that she was entitled to the annuity bequeathed to her by the will, for an account, & other relief. Upon demurrer to so much of the bill as prayed for the account & other relief, & answer as to the rest:—Held: deft. had incurred a personal liability to pay the annuity, & he had by his answer confessed an equity.—REES v. ENGELBACK (1871), L. 2302. —— —— Bequest "subject to" payment of testator's debts.]—Testator gave all his interest in certain leasehold farms mentioned in his will, & all the stock of every description thereon, & also all moneys due to him, to his son, subject nevertheless to the payment of all his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses.

Testator's son continued in occupation & receipt of the profits of the farms for about three years, when the leases of the farms & the stock thereon were disposed of. Testator's estate was involved in difficulties, & the liabilities to be discharged by the son, under the terms of the will, & as a condition of his accepting the bequest, greatly exceeded the value of the bequest:—Held: the son must be deemed to have elected to accept the bequest contained in the will, subject to payment of the debts, funeral & testamentary expenses; but he

B. Condition to Keep Premises in Repair.

2304. Person taking benefit under will—Duty to perform conditions attached to gift.]—Z. T. bequeathed certain leasehold property to which she had become entitled by will, to R. A., his exors., administrators, & assigns, absolutely, during the residue of her term therein, subject to the payment of the rent & performance of the covenants reserved & contained in the lease under which she held the premises; & as to her residuary personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, funeral, testamentary, & other expenses, she gave, devised & bequeathed the same to J. B., his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns absolutely. The lease under which the premises thus bequeathed to R. A. were held contained a covenant by the lessee to keep them in repair: it appeared that, at the time of testatrix's decease, dilapidations had taken place, but whether any of them had taken place before she came into possession of the premises was not shown. An order having been made, letting R. A. into possession & setting aside a sum of stock out of testatrix's estate to indemnify the exors.:—Held: on the language of the will, & also on general principles, R. A. took the property cum onere, & was liable as between himself on the one hand, & the exors. of Z. 2305. ·.]—A. B. being devisee for life of premises, with a condition against committing any manner of waste & for keeping the same in good & tenantable repair, became lunatic, & the premises were subsequently destroyed by accidental fire. A petition was then presented by the committee of the person who was also remainderman praying a declaration that the premises ought to be rebuilt at the expense of the lunatic's estate, & a reference as to the amount of such expense, & out of what fund it ought to be defrayed. The Lord Chancellor made an order for the reference, holding that the words of the will created an obligation upon the tenant for life to rebuild the premises, & that the question of such liability was rightly brought before the ct. on the petition.—Re SKINGLEY (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 221; 20 L. 2307. —— ——.]—Testator, who died in 1878, devised some cottages & marsh lands upon trust for his wife for life, she out of the rents & profits keeping "the premises in good tenantable repair & condition," & after her death upon trust for C. in fee. In 1882 C. mortgaged his reversion in fee to the widow, who was in receipt of the rents & profits of the property as tenant for life. She died in 1897, & her exors. brought an action of foreclosure against C., who had made no payment either of principal or interest since the date of the mtge., & who set up the Statutes of Limitations. At the trial C. submitted to the usual judgment for foreclosure with arrears of interest limited to six years prior to the date of the writ, but counterclaimed damages against the estate of the tenant for life for non-repair of the cottages & depreciation of the marsh lands, alleging that the latter had been continuously mown against all custom, & had thereby been greatly impoverished, & offered to redeem on the footing that any damages awarded him should be set off in account against what was due on the mtge., & contended that on redeeming he was only bound to pay six years' arrears of interest prior to the date of the writ. Testator had in 1874 granted a seven years' lease of the marsh lands, with a covenant by the lessee not to mow them oftener than once in any one year, but to keep them during the term in good condition, & the tenant for life in granting subsequent leases of the same lands had inserted covenants as to mowing similar to that in testator's lease. The cottages were out of repair & the marsh lands had been depreciated to some extent by mowing:—Held: C. was entitled to damages for non-repair of the cottages, but not for depreciation of the marsh lands, the tenant for life in her dealings with the latter having followed the course that had been adopted by the testator.—DINGLE v. COPPEN, COPPEN v. DINGLE, [1899] 1 Ch. 726; 68 L. 2308. —— ——.]—Testator devised a leasehold house to R. for life, she paying the rent & performing the covenants of the lease; he also left her the dividends of certain stocks for life. By the lease testator had covenanted to keep the house in repair. R. accepted the legacies & mortgaged her interests under the will to deft. society in one mtge. The society obtained an order for foreclosure but did not take possession of the house. R. was now a pauper lunatic. The trustees paid the fire insurance premiums on the house & the rent out of the dividends on the stock & handed over the balance to the society. The lessor claimed possession of the house on the ground of breach of covenants to repair it. The society disclaimed all interest in the house & declined to do the repairs although they claimed to be entitled to the dividends on the stocks. On a summons to determine whether they were liable to do the repairs:—Held: on accepting the legacies R. became personally liable to perform the covenants of the lease; the society had done nothing to make themselves liable to do the repairs; the gifts in the will were independent; & the society were entitled to retain the dividends on the stocks without being liable under the lease.—Re LOOM, FULFORD v. REVERSIONARY INTEREST SOCIETY, LTD., [1910] 2 Ch. 230; 79 L. 2309. —— —— No duty to complete unfinished building.]—Testator commenced building a column on his estate, which was only half finished at his death. By his will he declared that if the devisee for life of his estates "should neglect to keep in complete repair the column then being erected," he should forfeit his estate:—Held: this implied no obligation on the exors. to complete the column out of testator's assets.—JOLIFFE v. TWYFORD (1858), 26 Beav. 227; 28 L. 2311. —— —— Limitation of action.]—The limitations imposed by Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 2, are not applicable to an action by remaindermen against the exors. of a deceased tenant for life in respect of damage to the estate during his lifetime by reason of his failure to fulfil his obligation to repair. Such an action is not based on tort, but on the equitable principle that where a person accepts a benefit under a will on condition that he shall discharge a certain liability, he takes the benefit cum onere, & a ct. of equity will not apply to the equitable remedy the limitation contained in sect. 2 of the Act as to the time within which the action must be brought.—JAY v. JAY, [1924] 1 K. She died in 1767. G. died without issue, in 1779, having devised the estate to trustees, to secure an annuity to B., only son of his sister L., then dead, & subject thereto, to W., eldest son of B., for his life, with remainder to B.'s second son. In 1790, W., on his father's death, entered into possession of the whole estate, claiming under the will of G., & subsequently did various acts in the character of devisee for life. In 1814 he suffered a recovery of one moiety of the estate, & in 1816 conveyed the entirety to mtgees. in fee. In 1818, M., the descendant of H., the other coparcener, suffered a recovery of the other moiety, which, it was declared, should enure, subject to the trusts of a term to the use of W.'s mtgees.:—Held: although W. entered under the will, & manifested an intention to take the estate under it for his life only, that was immaterial, & he was remitted as to his moiety to the original estate tail, which was barred by the recovery in 1814.—DOE d. 2329. Disclaimer by married woman—Legacy subject to restraint on anticipation—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 1.]—Since the passing of above Act, which by sect. 1 enables a married woman to acquire & hold property as a feme sole, a married woman is entitled to disclaim a gift by her will or other disposition of personal property, notwithstanding that the property so given is subject to a restraint on anticipation.

Testatrix gave an annuity to a married woman, during her life for a separate use, without power of anticipation. The annuity was to commence from the death of testatrix & to be paid quarterly, & testatrix directed defts., whom she appointed exors. & trustees of her will, to set apart a fund for securing the annuity & testatrix gave the residue of her estate to tenants in common. Testatrix died in Feb. 1913. In May, 1913, defts. ascertained that it would be difficult to set aside a fund to answer the annuity without selling leasehold property which the residuary legatees were desirous of retaining. As the result of negotiations between the married woman & the residuary legatees, she agreed to disclaim the annuity in consideration of a lump sum to be paid her by them.

On an application by the married woman for a declaration that she was at liberty to refuse & disclaim the annuity:—Held: having done nothing to accept the bequest of the annuity, she was entitled to refuse & disclaim it.—Re WIMPERIS, WICKEN v. WILSON, [1914] 1 Ch. 502; 83 L. At her death she was entitled in fee to the P. estate, which was unincumbered. Some time after her death a remainder in fee to which she was entitled in the B. estate, which was subject to mtges. made by prior owners & was out of repair, fell into possession, & its income was only sufficient to pay the interest on the mtges. The trustees took out a summons for directions as to interest & repairs. The tenant for life contended that she could disclaim the B. estate, the remainderman contended that the rents of the P. estate were liable for the interest on the mtges. of the B. estate & for repairs of that estate:—Held: as the P. & B. estates were not specifically mentioned, but only formed parts of one gift in general terms, T. could not accept one & refuse the other.

There are two things given to the legatee, & the legatee is in no way bound to take one if he does not like to take it, but on the other hand, he may take the one entire & separate thing which is given to him without taking the other. But here what is given to the tenant for life, & to the remainderman is an aggregate, & what results from that aggregate is given to both of them. In my opinion under those circumstances if the tenant for life likes to accept the gift, & likes to accept it by entering into possession of part of the property, he cannot say I will take possession of this, & take it with the obligation thus thrown upon me, but at the same time I will reject another part of that one integral gift which is given to me by testatrix (COTTON, L.J.).—Re HOTCHKYS, FREKE v. CALMADY (1886), 32 Ch. 2338. Testator's intention considered.]—Where testator makes several bequests to a devisee, one of which is clogged with a burden created by testator, it is a question of the intention of testator, to be gathered from the will, whether the devisee must elect to take all or none of the gifts in the will, or whether he may accept the beneficial gifts & repudiate that which is burdensome.

Testator bequeathed a legacy to A. & devised freeholds to A. & his wife for their lives, with remainder over, & after several intervening gifts bequeathed leasehold premises to A.:—Held: A. might take the legacy & the freeholds, & repudiate the bequest of the leasehold.—WARREN v. RUDALL, Ex p. GODFREY (1860), 1 John. & H. 1; 29 L. 2339. —— —— —— ——.]—When by a will two distinct legacies are bequeathed to the same person, one of them being onerous & the other beneficial, primâ facie the legatee is entitled to disclaim the onerous legacy & to take the other. If, however, onerous property & beneficial property are included in the same gift, primâ facie the legatee cannot disclaim the onerous & accept the beneficial; he must take the whole gift or none of it. But this primâ facie rule may be rebutted if the will manifests a sufficient intention of testator to the contrary.

It appears to me plain that when two distinct legacies or gifts are made by will to one person he is, as a general rule, entitled to take one & disclaim the other, but that his right to do so may be rebutted if there is anything in the will to show that it was testator's intention that that option should not exist (FRY, J.).—GUTHRIE v. WALROND (1883), 22 Ch. He also bequeathed his leaseholds to trustees upon trust to pay the rents & hold the leaseholds on trusts corresponding to the uses limited of his freeholds so far as the law would allow.

He bequeathed the residuary personal estate to his trustees upon trust to pay his funeral & testamentary expenses, debts, & legacies, & to stand possessed of the residue upon the trusts which would be applicable thereto if the same had arisen from the sale of his P. freeholds, & so that the same should be deemed to be impressed with a trust for investment in the purchase of freeholds. Testator died on June 24, 1900. Early in 1900 testator agreed to purchase land in P. for £60,000 of which he paid on account only £4,000 in his lifetime. The property was worth somewhat less than £60,000. The question arose whether the real estate must bear the whole unpaid purchase-money, under Locke King's Acts, or whether the personal estate should bear the deficit. At the date of his death testator was also entitled to a leasehold house subject to a mtge. of £10,000. The mtge. was paid off on the sale of the house, which realised only £8,400. A similar question arose as to this deficit of £1,600:—Held: there was an aggregate gift of incumbered & unincumbered property, including the leaseholds, & the beneficiary could only take the benefit subject to the burden. The deficits must be borne by the aggregated freeholds & leaseholds, the personal estate being exonerated.—Re KENSINGTON, LONGFORD (EARL) v. KENSINGTON, [1902] 1 Ch. 203; 71 L. J. Ch. 170; 85 L. 2355. Nature of ademption.]—LEE v. LEE, No. 2392, post.

2356. Application of doctrine.]—Testatrix by her will, made in Feb. 1897, gave a moiety of a trust fund of £8,000 on deposit at V. & co. to which she was entitled, subject to a prior life interest, to her nephews & nieces. She bequeathed her residue, including money at her bankers & on deposit with V. & co. to S.

In Mar. 1897, the prior life interest determined : & on Dec. 14, 1897, £4,000 was transferred by the trustee to testatrix's deposit account with V. & co. :—Held : the plain rule in cases of ademption was to inquire whether the specific thing given remained or not at the death of testator. Here the £4,000, the moiety of the trust fund of £8,000, was intact & was not adeemed either in whole or in part.—Re VICKERS, VICKERS v. MELLOR (1899), 81 L. T. 719 ; 44 Sol. Jo. 90.

2358. —— To residuary gift.]—Testator bequeathed to a legatee "all my stocks, shares, & other investments," & appointed another person his exor., to whom he gave all the remainder of his property, "including any balance I may have at my agents." He subsequently became a lunatic, not so found by inquisition, & a receiver of his property was appointed. At that date he had at his agents a sum of £604 5*s.* 2*d.* An order was made directing the agents to pay to the receiver £104 5*s.* 2*d.*, which was applied for the lunatic's benefit, & to pay the balance of £500 into ct., & directing the investment of the £500 in India 3½ per cent. stock. It was invested in the purchase of £714 4*s.* 3*d.* such stock, which remained at the death of testator. He left little property except this stock:—Held: Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 123, did not apply to the conversion of money into stock, but only to the conversion of property into money, nor did it apply to a residuary bequest, & there was no ademption & the specific legatee was entitled to the stock.—Re WALKER, GOODWIN v. SCOTT, [1921] 2 Ch. 63; 90 L. 2361. ——.]—M., by her will dated in 1865, directed the trustees thereof to stand possessed of the sum of £1,500, then invested in the Bombay, Baroda, & Central India Ry. co., upon trust for her brother, who had then disappeared, for life, if he should present himself to the trustees within five years after her death; & after the five years or the decease of her brother, whichever should first happen, she bequeathed the sum of £500, part of the Bombay, Baroda, & Central India Railway shares, to the trustees of a charity for the benefit thereof. M. was at the date of her will possessed of about £1,900 in the railway, but at the date of her death in 1881 she was possessed of no property therein, & the brother had not appeared:—Held: the legacy to the charity was a specific & not a demonstrative legacy, & the investment out of which it was given having ceased to exist, the legacy was not payable to the charity out of testatrix's general estate.—Re SAYER, MCCLELLAN v. CLARK (1884), 53 L. 2362. ——.]—Testatrix bequeathed £200 to trustees on trust to accumulate for twenty-one years, & then to lay out the accumulated fund in repairing certain premises, & to pay the surplus to the same persons to whom the premises were devised; & then devised the premises in strict settlement. She afterwards sold the premises, & by a codicil bequeathed the purchase-money to the original devisee for life absolutely, & the codicil contained no reference to the £200:—Held: it was adeemed.—WHITEWAY v. FISHER (1861), 9 W. R. 433.

2363. ——.]—Testator, reciting that he was entitled, after the death of his sister, to £5,602 consols, bequeathed to his son the sum of £2,000 consols, part thereof, or a sum equal thereto, to be transferred or paid to him when the same should be received by his exors. After the date of his will testator's sister died, & he received the £5,602 Consols, which he sold out & mixed with his other moneys. He afterwards confirmed his will by a codicil, but died without having any sum of Consols:—Held: the particular fund, part of which was given to the son, being no longer in existence, the legacy failed.—OLIVER v. OLIVER (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 506; 40 L. J. Ch. 189; 24 L. T. 350; 19 W. R. 432.

2364. —— Devise of house contracted to be purchased—Sale repudiated by vendors before testator's death.]—Testator by his will, made in 1919, devised a freehold house, therein described as "recently contracted to be purchased by me" in trust for his granddaughter as therein mentioned, & he directed that in case the purchase should not have been completed in his lifetime all purchase-money & costs & expenses incident to the completion of the purchase should be paid out of his general personal estate. Between the date of testator's will & his death in 1920, the vendors repudiated their contract to sell the house to testator on the ground that they had agreed to sell the house to testator's agent in the mistaken belief that he was acting as agent of the tenant:—Held: at the date of testator's death no enforceable contract existed between him & the vendors, & the specific devisee was not entitled to require from the residuary legatees payment of the moneys which would have been laid out in completing the purchase & paying the expenses had there been a contract binding on testator.—Re RIX, STEWARD v. LONSDALE (1921), 90 L. J. Ch. 474; 125 L. T. 216; 65 Sol. Jo. 513.

2365. Subject-matter not found at testator's death.]—Where a particular chattel is specifically described & distinguished from all other things of the same kind & is not found among testator's effects it fails; or if disposed of in testator's lifetime it is an ademption of such legacy.—PURSE v. SNAPLIN (1738), as reported in 1 Atk. 414; 26 E. R. 262, L. C.

2366. Destruction of subject-matter.]—Testator gave specific chattels to a legatee, & he gave the residue of his estate & effects to his exors.; having insured these chattels, testator took them with him on an Indian voyage; the ship was lost at sea, the goods perished & testator was drowned; & the exors. received the moneys in which the goods had been insured from the insurers. In a suit for the administration of testator's estate:—Held: testator & the chattels having perished together the legatee had no interest in the chattels, &, consequently, not in the insurance money; but that it vested in the exors. as part of the residuary estate.—DURRANT v. FRIEND (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 343; 21 L. giving their owners a right to compensation. Testator after the passing of the Act made a codicil to his will & then died. 2369. Advance in testator's lifetime.] — An advance & settlement of £10,000 stock by testator, upon the marriage of his daughter, was held, upon evidence of the circumstances of the family & property, & of the declarations of testator, not to be an ademption of a bequest of £30,000 like stock, given upon similar trusts by his will made in the preceding month & pending the treaty of marriage.—HILL v. COLLETT (1839), 8 L. J. Ch. 189.

2370. Invalid appropriation of legacy due—By testator-executor.]—A sole extrix. was entitled to pecuniary legacies of £10,000 & £1,000 under the will. By her own will she specifically bequeathed those legacies, describing them as "the two several sums of £10,000 & £1,000." During her life she purported to appropriate certain shares & debentures towards her legacies:—Held: she had made no valid appropriation, & therefore her bequest of these legacies was not pro tanto adeemed.—Re BYTHWAY, GOUGH v. DAMES (1911), 80 L. J. Ch. 246; 104 L. T. 411; 55 Sol. Jo. 235.

2371. Effect of ademption—Ademption of specific gift—Formerly bequeathed as general gift.]—(1) Testator bequeathed as follows:—"to M., besides Australian metalliques for 104,000 florins, I give £5,000." By a subsequent codicil he bequeathed as follows:—"Whereas, I have by indorsement on two little parcels, containing 101 Austrian bonds of 1,000 florins each, given them to M.; I confirm disposition, & add to it £20,000":—Held: testator, as to the Austrian securities, referred to the same subject-matter; & testator not possessing such securities at his death, the gift of them failed.

(2) Where a testator, having given a general legacy, by a subsequent instrument makes it specific, the ademption of the specific legacy, without more, will not set up the general legacy.—HERTFORD (MARQUIS) v. LOWTHER (LORD), BERCHTOLDT'S (COUNTESS) CASE (1843), 7 Beav. 107; 13 L. 2372. Effect of subsequent confirmation of will.]—An adeemed bequest is not set up again by a subsequent confirmation of the will.—COWPER v. MANTELL (No. 1), COOPER v. MANTELL (No. 1) (1856), 22 Beav. 223; 27 L. T. O. S. 130; 2 Jur. N. S. 745; 4 W. R. 500; 52 E. R. 1094.

2375. —— Subject-matter described as existing at date of will.]—(1) The question whether a testamentary gift or appointment is adeemed by the subsequent disposal of the subject of the gift during the lifetime of testator is in every case a question of the construction of the will.

(2) If the gift or appointment be given simply by a description of the subject as it exists at the date of execution of the will, it will be adeemed if the subject be subsequently disposed of during the lifetime of testator.

(3) If, on the contrary, it be given by a description which not only includes the subject of the gift as it then exists, but still includes it in whatever other form it may happen to exist at the date of testator's death, it is not then adeemed by any subsequent disposal of it, provided that at testator's death the original subject of the gift is represented by actual property which can be identified.—Re DOWSETT, DOWSETT v. MEAKIN, [1901] 1 Ch. 398; 70 L. 2380. —— Will executing power.]—A will executing a power is not revoked by deeds altering the estate or interest of the party appointing in the property.

A disposition by will since Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), can only be revoked by ademption of the property devised, or by a declaration of an intention to revoke, or by words equivalent thereto.

All those cases, in which it was formerly held that a will was revoked by an alteration of the estate of testator, are now put an end to by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 23, & a will can only be revoked by marriage, by express declaration in writing, or by burning, etc. (SIR J. Surveyors appointed by W. & the co., but not in writing, settled the value of the leaseholds, & the former verbally agreed to accept the sum named. Testator bequeathed all the personal estate of which he should die possessed, except such share as he should become entitled to in the property of A. to his wife absolutely ; & he bequeathed all his share in A.'s property upon certain trusts mentioned in his will. A.'s estate, which consisted of two separate sums of stock, came into testator's possession after the date of his will, & the sums were transferred into his name. One of such sums of stock remained standing in his name at his death, but the other sum was sold out by him & applied for his own purposes :—Held : there was an ademption of the legacy in respect of the stock sold out, it having been mixed with testator's property & spent, but the stock transferred to him & continuing to stand in his name passed under the bequest.—LEE v. LEE (1858), 27 L. "all my interest in the C. estate." Prior to the date of the will, the C. estate, which had been appointed by will by testator's wife to him absolutely, was taken by the M. Board of Works, the purchase-money being paid into ct. Subsequently the wife died, & administration with her will annexed was taken out by testator, who then conveyed the C. estate to the Board, & obtained payment out to himself of the purchase-money, which he placed with his bankers partly on deposit & partly to his general account with his other moneys, from time to time drawing on that general account. Testator afterwards went to Philadelphia, where he died. Seven days before his death he wrote to his agent in Jamaica, desiring him to order his agents in England to invest all his moneys in their hands, received from the Transport Board, in any stock most beneficial to his estate. The larger part of the amount was, after the date of the will, received by testator under orders of the ct., & invested in his name in Consols, some small part of which he sold, but afterwards repurchased in part. The extrix., on testator's death, treating this stock as the subject of the legacy, transferred the son's one-third to him, & she also transferred the two-thirds parts to trustees, who paid the income to her & the son-in-law:—Held: on the principle of the civil law, testator having set apart a specific fund received by him, in order that it may be expressly reserved for the benefit of the legatee, it was not adeemed.—CLARK v. BROWNE (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 524; 24 L. 2407. Annuities paid off.]—Another question in this cause is as to a sum of one thousand three hundred pounds paid out of testator's South Sea annuities after the making his will & before his death, by way of annihilation, under 4 Geo. 2, c. 5, it not appearing what is become of it; whether this is to be considered as an ademption pro tanto out of the several legacies charged thereupon? or, whether this ought to be made good to the legatees out of the assets in the hands of the exor.?

As to this question the case was thus: testator had a great quantity of South Sea, Bank, & India stock, & devised as follows: "Item, I give & devise to my daughter M., her heirs & assigns, my rentcharge of twenty-five pounds a year, & all my money, goods, chattels, notes, bonds, securities, & personal estate, except all such money or securities for money as I have in Bank stock, India stock, South Sea stock, & South Sea annuities, which I charge with the payment of my debts, legacies, & funeral; & the surplus I give to trustees for my daughters." Afterwards, on Jan. 26, 1731, by a codicil, reciting, that he had changed his mind in some things, & confirmed it as to the rest, he gives to his daughter M. the fifth part of the surplus of the South Sea & other stocks & annuities, to be at her own disposal, & upon her death then to the surviving daughters. Between the making of the will & this codicil the thirteen hundred pounds was paid off. As to this part of the case, I am of opinion, that this is not to be considered as an ademption of any part of the legacies, but that the deficiency ought to be made good to the legatees out of the assets of testator. It has been insisted for the pltf., that the South Sea stock charged with the payment of the testator's legacies was a specific legacy of stock statu quo tempore doni, & as such would not admit of any satisfaction in value, but must be extinguished as to so much which has been paid off. But I deny it to be a specific legacy; & if not such a legacy, the Act of Parliament is no ademption of it. It is plainly a general bequest of South Sea stock, whether more or less, which testator had at the time of his death; for though to some purposes a will must be taken to speak from the time of its making, yet that rule holds only as to particular things or individuals, & not as to all personal legacies in general; but construction must be made upon the whole will; & testator's intent is to be considered, whether it was to extend the description of the thing devised to the time of his death, or to confine it to the time of executing his will (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—WINGFIELD v. NEWTON (1739), 2 Coll. 520, n.; 9 Mod. He afterwards, on the expiration of the partnership, renews it with the same partners, giving them a greater interest than they had under the former articles:—Held: they were entitled to one-ninth of testator's interest in the partnership at his death; & the renewal of the articles was not an ademption nor revocation of the devise.—BACKWELL v. CHILD (1755), Amb. 260; 27 E. 2412. Sale by testator—Long annuities converted to short.]—Testator gave to M., whom he afterwards married, among other bequests, £50 long annuities, which he had purchased with £1,000 left him by the will of J. After his marriage he made a codicil, by which he confirmed to his wife the benefits given to her by his will, in addition to the provision made for her by her marriage settlement. He afterwards sold his long annuities, & with the produce purchased new annuities, which differed only from the long annuities by being terminable a quarter of a year sooner. On the death of his wife he gave to his daughter J. £200 stock 3 per cent. reduced annuities, & to two other persons £50 3 per cent. Reduced annuities respectively, & to his son the residue of his property, after paying those legacies, & he appointed two persons his exors. & trustees. At the date of his will testator had £700 3 per cent. Reduced annuities, but he afterwards sold out that stock, & invested part of the produce on mtge.:—Held: the gift to F. of the interest of testator's property in the funds was specific, & was consequently adeemed by the sale of the stock, but the other legacies were general, & F. took only a life interest in testator's residuary estate.—HAYES v. HAYES (1836), 1 Keen, 97; 5 L. After the date of his will testator married, & by a codicil gave to his wife for her life all the income, dividends, & annual proceeds of his entire estate, & postponed the payment of all legacies & the distribution of all estates vested in him till after her death, & subject thereto confirmed his will. Between the dates of his will & of his codicil testator sold his Egyptian 9 per Cent. After the date of her will all testatrix's shares of the above description were, by a statutory scheme of amalgamation of the Imperial & other cos., converted into stock of the Gas Light & Coke co.:—Held: a provision in the scheme, transferring to the substituted stock the trusts & limitations affecting the old shares, "so as to give effect to & not revoke any testamentary disposition," was effectual to prevent ademption.

Three days after the settlement the wife made her will in execution of the power & apportioned the sum of bank annuities between three appointees. Subsequently a portion of the bank annuities was with the consent of the wife & her husband sold out under a power of varying securities contained in the settlement & invested in railway stock:—Held: the legacies appointed by the will were not adeemed by the subsequent change in the investment of the fund but the appointees took the railway stock in the proportions in which the bank annuities were appointed to them by the will.—Re JOHNSTONE'S SETTLEMENT (1880), 14 Ch. 2421. Shares in unlimited company converted into limited company.]—Testator bequeathed "fifty shares in the York Union Banking co.," to be held upon certain trusts. At the date of the will the co. was registered & incorporated as an unlimited co. under the Companies Acts, & testator held seventy shares therein of the nominal value of £100 each. Between the dates of his will & his death the co. was registered as a limited co. under the same style, except that the word Limited was added, & each £100 share was converted into two shares of the nominal value of £60, & one hundred & forty of these new shares were allotted to testator in substitution for his seventy shares of £100 each:—Held: the bequest was not specific, but general, it was in effect a gift of such a sum as at the death of testator should be the value of fifty shares of £100 each in the unlimited co., & as, by reason of events of which testator was aware, it had become impossible to determine such value, the bequest failed.—Re GRAY, DRESSER v. GRAY (1887), 36 Ch. Under the scheme of reconstruction testator became entitled to two £5 fully-paid preference shares & two £5 fully-paid ordinary shares in the new co. for every £4 ordinary share he held in the old co., but in other respects the new co. was substantially the same as the old co.:—Held: there had been no ademption, & N. was entitled to the substituted shares in the new co.—Re LEEMING, TURNER v. LEEMING, [1912] 1 Ch. 828; 81 L. After the execution of the will testator, in exercise of the power conferred on him as tenant for life by Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), granted leases of parts of the appointed property in consideration of premuims paid by the lessees. The premiums were paid to the trustees of the settlement, & were invested by them:—Held: neither by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 36), s. 24, nor by Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), s. 22 (5), did the appointment carry the premiums to the appointees, &, there being, in the opinion of the ct., nothing in the will to show an intention that the premiums should pass under the appointment the premiums went as in default of appointment under the provisions of the settlement.

2441. —— By co-owner—Upon trust to allot among grantors.]—A testatrix, entitled with others to rights of pasture over certain lands, by will, before the Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), devised the estate in respect of which her rights of pasture were held. Afterwards, in 1805, she joined with her co-owners of the rights of pasture, & with the owners of the lands over which they extended, in granting the rights & the lands to trustees upon trust to allot & convey the lands amongst the several grantors, & also to make & repair roads, drains, bridges, etc. In 1807, the trustees reconveyed to testatrix a portion of the lands in lieu of her rights, by a deed to which she was made a party. Testatrix, at the time of making her will, had a sum of £500 out on mtge., which she afterwards called in, & applied to different purposes. The mother being dead, the testatrix took out administration; &, upon her death, without having altered or revoked her will, the question was, whether the legacy was adeemed:—Held: no ademption.—LE GRICE v. FINCH (1817), 3 Mer. 50; 36 E. for two persons, the sum of £4,000, "at present secured by a mtge. of certain landed property at Podington, Beds." During the lifetime of testator the mtge. was paid off. He became of unsound mind, & so remained till his death; but two years before the latter event the specific legatee, who was named as exor., with the concurrence of his mother, who was named as extrix., converted the stock into money, which they deposited in their own & a third person's names at a bank, where it remained till after testator's death:—Held: there had been no ademption, & the specific legatee was entitled.—JENKINS v. JONES (1866), L. By a deed poll in 1855 she appointed the A. property upon such trusts as she by deed or her last will "should from time to time or at any time thereafter direct or appoint," & in default of appointment upon trust for Y. Testatrix died in 1857:—Held: reading together sects. 24 & 27 of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), the will operated as an exercise of the power given or reserved by the subsequent deed poll & passed the property to X.—AIREY v. BOWER (1887), 12 App. Cas. 263; 56 L. 2448. Devise of rentcharge—Purchase of fee simple by testator—Merger.]—Testator by his will made in 1894 specifically devised a rentcharge of £15 per annum issuing out of a freehold house to his daughter absolutely. In 1913 he purchased the fee simple of the house, & his conveyance expressly stated that the rentcharge should merge in the fee simple. He died in 1919:—Held: the devise of the rentcharge had been adeemed, & the daughter took no estate or interest in the house.—Re BICK, EDWARDS v. BUSH, [1920] 1 Ch. 488; 89 L. J. C. Transfer by Trustees into Testator's Name.

2449. Gift not adeemed.]—Stock was, in contemplation of a marriage vested in trustees for the separate use of the wife for life, & with full power for her to dispose of it by will. She made her will during coverture. She survived the husband, & afterwards took a transfer of the stock into her own name. This does not operate as a revocation of the will, or an ademption of the bequest of the stock.—DINGWELL v. ASKEW (1788), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 427; 29 E. R. 1233.

2450. ——.]—A married woman having a power to appoint personal estate, held in trust for her, by her last will & testament notwithstanding her coverture, made a will in exercise of her power during the life of her husband. She survived her husband, & afterwards took an assignment from her trustee of the personal estate to herself. This assignment does not operate as a revocation of the will.

The vesting of the legal interest in her by the assignment of the trustee could in no manner affect the bequests of the will. The mere accession of the legal to the beneficial interest is not a revocation even of real estate. The legacy given to her husband lapsed by his death & passed by the residuary clause in the will (LEACH, M.R.).—CLOUGH v. CLOUGH (1834), 3 My. & K. 296; 40 E. R. 113.

so much as should be paid in, to be made good to the grandchild out of the surplus of her estate. Afterwards testatrix released £2,000 of the debt to S. without having received any of the money. (2) A. devises £500 legacy to the second son of S. & devises other legacies to the other sons of S. & declares, that if any of the younger sons of S. should die before they are capable of receiving their share, the share or legacy of him so dying shall go to the survivor; the second son dies in testator's life-time, this £500 given to the second son shall not survive.—RIDER v. WAGER (1725), 2 P. SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2474. Failure of bequest of personal estate—Direction exonerating personal estate from mortgage debt—Liability of personal estate.]—Testator having two estates in mtge., orders the debt upon one to be paid out of his personal estate, & charges the other upon the mtged. premises, & gives the residue of his personal estate to persons by whose deaths it afterwards lapses; the mtge. debt charged upon the mtged. premises, shall be paid out of the personalty; for, though he exonerated the personal estate for the legatees, non constat he meant so to do for the next of kin, & it is as if he had said nothing of his personal estate; in which case a mere gift of the mtged. premises, subject to the mtge., would not exempt the personalty.—HALE v. COX (1791), 3 Bro. 2475. Failure of gift of term on trust—No trust declared—Gift follows limitations in will.]—Devise to trustees for ninety-nine years upon the trusts hereinafter expressed; & from & after the expiration or other sooner determination of the term in strict settlement. The term, no trust being declared, decreed to attend the inheritance, according to the limitations of the will, & no resulting trust for the heir, upon the apparent intention to devise immediate estates, subject to the term, not future estates, expectant on its determination.—SIDNEY v. SHELLEY (1815), 19 Ves. 352; 34 E. 2476. Failure to provide objects for whole gift.]—Testator directed his exors. to invest £4,000 & pay the interest of £400, part thereof, to his niece C. for life, & from & after her death to pay the capital to such persons as she should appoint, & in default of appointment, to her next of kin. Testator directed his exors. to pay the interest of six other sums of £400, "further part of the £4,000," to six other nieces for life, in like manner, "& with the same like power of appointment over the capital & gift over, to the next of kin of the nieces in default of appointment, as he had before declared in all respects of & concerning the bequest to his niece C." Testator then directed his exors. to pay the interest of the £400, "being the remaining part of the £4,000," to his niece J., & also the capital of the sum, in precisely the same words as the former bequests:—Held: the unappropriated part of the £4,000 fell into the residue of testator's estate.—EDWARDS v. COREY (1853), 22 L. T. O. S. 9.

2477. Failure of mode of application.]—B. made his will in 1830, directing after payment of debts, etc., & legacies, "all my remaining property

B. died in 1859, having survived his exors., leaving a brother & three sisters his only next of kin, & children of his sister C., all grown up, surviving him.

On a question as to administration with the will annexed, the ct. held that C.'s children were entitled as beneficial residuary legatees.—PRESANT & PRESANT v. GOODWIN (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 544; 29 L. J. P. M. & A. 115; 2 L. T. 57; 24 J. P. 344; 6 Jur. N. S. 404; 164 E. R. 852.

2478. Failure of purpose of gift—Gift by reference to terms of settlement—No existing settlement.]—Certain family estates were settled in strict settlement by a deed made in 1832. In 1863 the then tenant in tail in possession executed a disentailing deed, & became seised of the estates in fee simple. Testator, who died in 1877, by his will made shortly before his death, left his residuary estate, in the events which happened, to trustees upon trust to convey & assign the same to the trustees for the time being of the above-mentioned settled estates, to be held upon the trusts declared by the settlement of the same estates:—Held: as there was not at the date of the will any existing settlement, nor were there any settled estates, & as there were not, & could never be, any trustees of such settled estates, there was an intestacy, as testator had given his property for a purpose which had wholly ceased to exist, & could not be supplied.—Re SLADE, WITHAM v. WATSON (1919), 89 L. See Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 25.

2479. General rule—Gift falls into residue.]—A wife having power to appoint £4,000 to any of her kin; &, for want of appointment, to go according to the statute, appoints it by will to her nephew, "upon condition" that he paid his mother an annuity of £100. She then bequeathed to her niece S. all the rest & residue of what she had power to dispose of. The nephew dying in her life time, the appointment as to him was void, but not so as to the annuitant, & the remainder was held to pass by the above residuary bequest.—OKE v. HEATH (1748), 1 Ves. 2489. —— ——.]—Testator gave the interest of £2,000, to be paid to his daughter for life; & in case her husband should survive her, & have children then living by her, he was to enjoy the interest during his widowhood; but on his marrying again, it was to devolve to the children then living, in equal portions. The husband died before the wife, the wife died leaving several children:—Held: the children were not entitled, & the money fell into the residue.—CAREW v. ROBINSON (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 56.

2490. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to his wife for life, &, after her decease, to his three sons, equally to be divided amongst them, if they should be all living at the decease of his wife; but, if any or either of them should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife, & should leave any child or children, his will was that such child or children who should be living at the time of his wife's death, should be substituted in the place of such of his sons who should so happen to die, & take his, her or their parent's share. He thereout gave J. £100 & one-eighteenth of the residue, & he gave the remaining portions of the residue to other persons. Testator directed that a certain piece of ground, called the "Mount," should be purchased by his exors. for the purpose of erecting a monument for the reception of his own remains, together with those of other parts of his family. He then gave the remainder of his property to the govt. of Bengal for certain charitable purposes at Dacca. It appeared from the master's report that the owner of the "Mount" would not sell it, whereby the particular purpose to which it was intended to be appropriated failed:—Held: against those claiming under the Statute of Distributions, the clause in the will respecting the monument ought to be considered as if it had never been inserted, & as it failed of taking effect it must be considered as falling into the residuary fund for the benefit of the charity objects.—MITFORD v. REYNOLDS (1848), 16 Sim. 105; 17 L. 2496. —— ——.]—Testator, by his will, gave to A. a sum of £1,000 in trust to invest & accumulate, & pay the accumulated fund to any son he might have named John who should attain twenty-two years of age, & if the first son he should have & call John should die before twenty-two, then to the next son called John, & if no son called John should attain twenty-two years, then A. was to retain the £1,000 for his own use. Testator then declared that his residuary estate should be divided among his pecuniary & particular legatees in proportion to the particular legacies. A. claimed to retain the £1,000 on the ground that the legacy was void as being too remote; & the residuary legatees claimed it according to their shares of the residue:—Held: the residuary legatees were entitled, & not A.—JOY v. ASPINWALL (1854), 23 L. 2497. —— ——.]—Testatrix devised an estate, E., to A. absolutely, & "all her freeholds, etc., not hereinbefore devised" to A. for life, with remainders over. A. died in testatrix's life:—Held: the estate, E., passed under the residuary devise.—GREEN v. DUNN (1855), 20 Beav. 6; 24 L. J. Ch. 577; 25 L. T. O. S. 151; 3 W. R. 277; 52 E. R. 504.

2498. —— ——.]—Testator gave all his real & personal property of whatever nature & kind soever to trustees, upon trust for his sister; provided always, & he thereby directed that three several farms, therein respectively described, should be sold, & the proceeds applied to purposes prohibited by the Statute of Mortmain:—Held: the farms so directed to be sold passed to testator's sister as part of the general devise for her benefit.

The legislature intended by this enactment [Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 25] to assimilate the law as to residuary devises of real estate with that of residuary gifts of personal property, which has long been settled to comprise every legacy which failed by lapse or by being void ab initio (STUART, V.-C.).—CARTER v. HASWELL (1857), 26 L. 2499. —— ——.]—Testator gave freehold & leasehold property to his wife for life, & after her decease, to A., to B., to C., to D., to E., to F., to G., & to H.: this to be paid to them by his exors., free from every husband or wife that then was or ever should be; & after their decease, to their children, share & share alike, for his (testator's) term & interest. There was a residuary gift in the will. H. survived testator & the tenant for life, & then died intestate & without issue:—Held: his share in the above-mentioned gift thereupon fell into the residue of testator's estate.—WATERS v. WATERS (1857), 26 L. appoint, & in default of appointment to the use of the children of his daughter who should be living at the death of the survivor of his daughter & her husband, or who should be previously dead leaving issue then living, their heirs & assigns in equal shares, as tenants in common; but if there should be no such child, then to the use of such of his sons or other daughters as should be then living, or should have previously died leaving issue then living, their heirs & assigns, as tenants in common. The will contained a residuary devise. E. survived the testator, & after his death married R., & died in 1872 without issue. R. has since died. to vest whatever residue might be, & pay the dividends to the annuitants in the same proportions; & if more than sufficient, to vest the surplus, & divide it & the capital sums set apart for the annuities, as the same should become tangible, by the death of each annuitant, among residuary legatees. B. predeceased the testator. The residue did not yield sufficient income every year to pay F. & P. £400 each. On F.'s death, P. & F.'s personal representatives claimed payment of all the arrears out of the then enlarged income of the residue:—Held: (1) F. & P. were entitled to payment of £400 each, only in those years in which the income of the residue was sufficient; when in any year that income was more than sufficient, the excess belonged to the residuary legatees; on F.'s death half the capital of the residue became divisible among them, & then P. became entitled to the income in each year of the other half; but when in any year this income exceeded £400 the excess belonged to the residuary legatees, & neither P. nor F.'s representatives were entitled to any payment of arrears; (2) no benefit accrued to the residuary legatees from the lapse of the annuity to B. except when thereby the income of the residue exceeded the amount of the two subsisting annuities.—CASAMAJOR v. PEARSON (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 69; 8 E. 2530. —— ——.]—By a marriage settlement, dated in 1863, after reciting that B., the wife, was "seised of or otherwise well entitled to" the freeholds therein described, subject to the life estate of J., & that she was entitled to leasehold premises & certain personal estate, the freeholds were conveyed to trustees, subject to the life estate of J., & the leaseholds & the personal estate were assigned to them, upon trust as to £10,000 for B. for life, & afterwards for A., the husband, for life, & subject thereto, as of all the realty & personalty, as B. should appoint, & in default in trust for B. for life, &, if she should pre-decease her husband, in trust as to the realty for her heirs, & as to the personalty for her next of kin, as if she had died unmarried. The settlement contained the usual covenant for further assurance. At the date of the settlement it was believed that B. was entitled to the entirety of the freeholds & leaseholds, subject to the life estate of J., whereas she was entitled to only thirteen-sixteenths thereof, & J. was then, & to the time of his death, entitled to three-sixteenths. J. died in 1866, having by his will given his property to B. B. made her will in 1880, & in exercise of the powers in the settlement, & of every other power, gave all the freeholds & leaseholds comprised in the settlement to W. & T. equally; & she gave all the rest of her personal estate to trustees to pay the income to her husband for life, & afterwards to divide such estate equally between B., W., & T. She declared that her exors. should have power to sell her real & personal estate. B. made a codicil in 1880, revoking the gift of any moneys or other properties which she should have accumulated from or purchased with the income of the property comprised in the settlement, or the corpus of any property not included in the settlement & otherwise acquired, & giving the same to her husband. T. died in B.'s lifetime, without issue. The questions were, who was entitled to the share of the residuary personal estate, the gift of which lapsed by the death of T.; who was entitled to the three-sixteenths of the freeholds; & who was entitled to the interest in such three-sixteenths, the gift of which lapsed by the death of T.:—Held: (1) B. had made the personal estate which was included in the residuary gift part of her own assets, & so far as it lapsed, it passed to her next of kin, as though at her death it had belonged to her absolutely; (2) the person claiming under the appointment had as regards the three-sixteenths of the freeholds, the right to insist upon that claim, either on the ground that the recital in the settlement amounted to an estoppel, or that he had an equity to enforce the covenant for further assurance; B. had made the property part of her own estate, & so far as it lapsed, it devolved upon her heir-at-law.—Re HORTON, HORTON v. PERKS, HORTON v. CLARK (1884), 51 L. Testator's son survived him & died under twenty-one. His brother Joseph died in his lifetime:—Held: the gift of the further surplus was not a residuary gift, but was a gift of the surplus of testator's property after the three sums of £500 each should be subtracted from it; & the legal heirs & successors of the brothers & sister were not intended to take unless all of them died so as not to take; &, consequently, that there was an intestacy as to the £500 & the share of the further surplus given to Joseph.—GIBSON v. HALE (1849), 17 Sim. 129; 14 Jur. 27; 60 E. She directed her trustees to visit the house & premises once in every three months to see that the trusts were effectually carried out, & declared that if any trustee should neglect or refuse to carry out the trusts aforesaid, any real or personal estate given or intended to be given to him by the will should go to persons therein named, absolutely:—Held: there was an intestacy as to the twenty years terms in the house, yard, garden, & outbuildings.—BROWN v. BURDETT (1882), 21 Ch. Trusts were declared of the £2,000, which, as to £1,000, were for a daughter of testator for life, & after her death for her children. The sister died during testator's lifetime:—Held: the above devise was not a devise minus the £7,000, but was a devise subject to a charge of that sum; &, in consequence of the death of the sister, the legacy of £1,000 fell into the devise & belonged to A.—SUTCLIFFE v. COLE (1855), 3 Drew. 135; 24 L. Test in all such cases. Is the thing in question excepted out of the devised property—in other words, did testator mean to give that property minus the thing in question, or is it a charge on that property? 2573. ——.]—Testatrix gave to C. all her personal property except a certain wharf which she bequeathed to other persons charged with certain debts & annuities. The bequest of the wharf failed for remoteness:—Held: the wharf fell into the residue, & belonged to C.

You may have a residuary bequest in various forms; the same thing may be meant though not expressed in the same words. But, however it is expressed, the effect must be that it is intended to comprise all which is not disposed of by the will. It is not a true residue if there is some part not disposed of by the will to anybody at all. There is a difference between a part of the estate being undisposed of & a part being unduly disposed of. When I say a residue I mean the residue of the estate not professed to be otherwise disposed of by the will. If any part is not professed to be disposed of at all by the will there is no true residuary gift. The wording is not material. If a man says, "I give all my personal estate except my gold watch, which I give to A., & my leasehold house, which I give to B.," that is a true residuary gift. The common form no doubt is to begin with a bequest of legacies to A., B., & C., & then to give the residue to D. But it means the same thing. Evans v. Jones, No. 2492, ante, is an authority for that, if one is wanted. But it is very different if testator gives everything to A. except his gold watch & his leasehold estate & does not give them to anybody else. In that case there is not a lapse or void gift of the watch & leasehold estates, they are not legacies at all, but they go to the next of kin, & there is no true residuary gift. But the moment we get a true residue the law is that the residue is increased by the lapse of a legacy or by the fact that it has not been effectually given away in accordance with the expression of testator's intention (JESSEL, M.R.).—BLIGHT v. HARTNOLL (1883), 23 Ch. It appeared from the evidence that testator had, so far as was known, no nephew named J., & though he had had a brother of that name the brother had predeceased him:—Held: the case was governed by Thompson v. Whitelock, No. 2572, ante, but was really a stronger case than that; & the gift to J. failing, the beneficiaries of the wife were entitled to the £500 bequeathed to him, subject to a liability to refund it should a nephew of testator bearing that name establish a claim.—Re JUPP, GLADMAN v. JUPP (1903), 87 L. Sect. 6.—Effect of failure of gift: Sub-sect. 3.]

SUB-SECT. 3.—EFFECT ON SUBSEQUENT INTERESTS—ACCELERATION.

2575. General rule.]—Where there are in a will successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely, the first of those persons who survives testator takes absolutely, although he would have taken nothing if any previous legatee had survived & had taken; the effect of the failure of an earlier gift being to accelerate, not to destroy, the later gift.

Application of this principle to successive limitations, in the forms properly applicable to real estate, of property erroneously supposed by testator to be unconverted, but in fact converted into personalty.

Testator, who under a settlement was absolutely entitled, subject to a life estate, to a moiety of the proceeds of a certain real estate under a trust for sale, by his will devised that real estate by its proper description, reciting that he was seised or possessed of it by virtue of the settlement, subject to the life estate, together with certain real estate of his own, to trustees, to the use of H. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve the contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the first & other sons of H. successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first & other sons of his niece E. successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first & other sons of his niece M. successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of the first & other sons of his niece F. successively in tail male, with remainders over.

H. survived testator & died a bachelor. M. also survived testator & died unmarried. E. was still alive but unmarried, & seventy years of age. F. had two sons, the eldest of whom died before testator:—Held: (1) testator's moiety of the proceeds of sale passed under the devise of the land; (2) there was no lapse by reason of the death of the first son of F. before testator, & the second son of F. took the moiety of the proceeds of sale absolutely at the death of testator, subject to the contingency of E. having a son; (3) the gift to the second son of F. on failure of issue of the first son was not void under the rule against perpetuities, because the estate, by the terms of the gift, must vest, if at all, in the lifetime of a person living at the death of testator; (4) E. being now past child bearing, the second son of F. was entitled to the intermediate income since the death of the tenant for life.—Re LOWMAN, DEVENISH v. PESTER, [1895] 2 Ch. 348; 64 L. 2576. ——.]—The principle that where there are in a will successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely the first of those persons who survives testator takes absolutely, although he would have taken nothing if any previous legatee had survived & taken also applies to real estate. Where, therefore, testatrix by her will gave freeholds absolutely to A. subject to the bequest that whatever of the freeholds should remain after A.'s death should be given to a named charity:—Held: if A. had survived testatrix the gift to the charity would have been repugnant & void, & A. would have taken absolutely. But A. having died in the lifetime of testatrix, the doctrine of repugnancy did not apply, & the gift to the charity was accelerated & took effect.—Re DUNSTAN, DUNSTAN v. DUNSTAN, [1918] 2 Ch. 304; 87 L. 2578. —— Donee not in existence—Gift void for remoteness.]—Wherever land, or any interest in land, which would descend to the heir-at-law, is devised for purposes which the law will not permit to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of, whether testator intended that he should have it or not; for there is this distinction between the case of a devisee & that of an heir-at-law, that the devisee takes by force of the intent of testator, & can only take what is given him by the will to him; whereas the heir-at-law takes whatever is undisposed of, not by force of the intent, but by the rule of law. Therefore where A. devised lands to his son B. for life, remainder to the first & other sons of B. in tail male, remainder to the second, third, & other sons of A. successively in tail male; & in case there should be no such issue male of A.'s body, or the same should become extinct, then to trustees for a term of sixty years, to retain the rents, etc., & apply them in the purchase of lands to be conveyed to such person as should then be in possession by virtue of his will of certain other estates therein mentioned, for life, with such remainders as would continue the estates as long as possible in testator's name & blood; & after the trusts should be executed or the term expired, the estate was limited to C. for life, with remainders over: & it happened that the persons so in possession at the time when the conveyance could have been made of the lands to be purchased as above was one not in existence at the time of A., testator's death, & the uses were considered as in the event too remote & void:—Held: the consequence of the failure of the intermediate devise was, not that the next devisee became entitled as if there had been no such intermediate devise, but the trusts of the lands to be purchased as above resulted to the heir-at-law.—TREGONWELL v. SYDENHAM (1815), 3 Dow, 194; 3 E. She directed her residuary estate to be converted & divided into sixteen parts, two of which she directed to be paid to S. & two to be held on the same trusts as the legacy of £1,000. By a codicil she revoked all gifts to or in favour of E. & S. respectively. But in case of the death of testatrix's nephews & niece, leaving either of her sisters surviving, testatrix gave & bequeathed all the principal sums, etc., & all other her estate unto the survivor of her sisters absolutely. Testatrix made a codicil, whereby she requested "all names of T. R., J. & of D., R. 2583. —— ——.]—Testator by his will gave his business to trustees upon trust to carry it on for the benefit of his four sons, including G., until the youngest attained twenty-one, with power to employ any of them, for reward, as manager or otherwise, & subject as aforesaid in trust for the sons equally when the youngest attained twenty-one, & he declared that if, on the determination of the trusts as to the business, any son should be dead or unwilling to carry it on, any of the other sons were to be entitled to purchase his share.

By paragraph 6 of the will the trustees & the sons, while respectively carrying on the business, were to be entitled to use the property on which it was carried on for that purpose at a specified rent ; & G. was to be entitled to occupy a house, 133, W. Road, at a fixed rent. These rents were payable to testator's widow for life, & after her death to two of his daughters during spinsterhood. Subject as aforesaid both properties were devised to the trustees to be held upon trust as to one-fourth share for G. for life, & after his death for his children in fee simple.

By a codicil reciting that testator had reasons for dissatisfaction with G., that he had ceased to employ him in his business, & that G. had at testator's desire ceased to occupy 133, W. Road, testator revoked the trust for permitting G. to occupy that house, & proceeded to revoke "each & every devise, bequest, gift & legacy contained in my will to or for the benefit of my same son," & to revoke & annul "every provision & benefit thereby given, made or intended to or for him," & to direct that "every clause of my will purporting to entitle him to share any part or parts of my estate, or of the proceeds, income or profits thereof with any other person or persons shall be construed, & the directions & trusts thereof shall be carried out, as if the name of my son G. had never appeared therein." Testator also by the codicil directed that G. should not be appointed manager of or employed in the business, & left a legacy of £500 in trust for the children of G. at twenty-one or marriage, & for their maintenance in the meantime, but directed that the trustees should not pay any income of the legacy to G. pursuant to s. 43 of Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 43 :—Held : the revocation extended only to the benefits given by the will to G. ; the interests thereby given to G.'s children were not revoked ; but the children's interests were accelerated & the children were in addition entitled to the legacy of £500.—Re WHITEHORNE, WHITEHORNE v. BEST, [1906] 2 Ch. 121 ; 75 L. By a codicil he gave his personal estate to his wife for life for her separate use, independently of any future husband. "The remainder to be equally divided to my surviving children." One of the attesting witnesses was the husband of L., who had two infant children at the testator's death:—Held: the incapacity of L. to take the life estate did not create an intestacy as to either the real or the personal estate, but the gift to her children was a remainder which was thereby accelerated.—JULL v. JACOBS (1876), 3 Ch. At the death of testator's widow one of the daughters was living who had several children. Her husband was an attesting witness to the will, & consequently the gift to her was void under Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15:—Held: the daughter's children were not to be disappointed by her disability, but took an immediate interest in her share as tenants in common.—Re CLARK, CLARK v. RANDALL (1885), 31 Ch. Then, after giving numerous legacies & annuities, testator devised & bequeathed his real & personal estate not otherwise specifically disposed of to trustees upon trust to sell & convert, & to stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts therein mentioned.

J., testator's eldest son, had disclaimed the estate for life limited to him by the will. He was married & his wife was living, but he had no issue & there was no prospect of any:—Held: the estate for life in remainder of W. was not accelerated by J.'s disclaimer, but the rents & profits of the disclaimed estate during the life of J., so long as he had no son, formed part of testator's residuary estate & were distributable as income of that estate.—Re SCOTT, SCOTT v. SCOTT, [1911] 2 Ch. 374; 80 L. A. was still living, but had no son. B., to whom the income had been paid during his life by way of family arrangements, was now dead without issue. By a codicil dated in 1916 testator revoked pltf.'s life interest in the Irish estates " & all other benefits " given him by the will, & in lieu thereof he devised the Irish estates to the use of his trustees during pltf.'s life upon trust to pay him a certain annuity out of income. In all other respects he confirmed his will. In 1918 testator died a bachelor, leaving pltf. his heir-at-law. Pltf. was married in 1914, but had no children :—Held : testator had shown a clear intention to make the equitable, limitation of the Kent estates completely exhaustive against his heir, & consequently until pltf. had a son infant deft.'s life interest in the surplus rents was accelerated.—Re CONYNGHAM, CONYNGHAM v. CONYNGHAM, [1921] 1 Ch. 491; 90 L. The will contained a management clause which empowered the trustees, so long as the rules of law & equity permitted, to manage the real estate & to receive the rents & profits thereof, & thereout to pay & discharge the expenses of management & repairs, & to pay the balance of the rents to the person for the time being entitled thereto. Testator died in 1888. E. died in 1921, a bachelor. R. was living, but had no son. On an application by C. for payment to her of the balance of the rents & profits :—Held : on construction of the will as a whole, the trustees took the legal estate in fee & the limitations to the beneficiaries following the limitation to the trustees were equitable, therefore the vested interest of C. took effect at once, but without prejudice to the estate in tail male of any son of R. in case such son should be born.—Re BROOKE, BROOKE v. DICKSON, [1923] 2 Ch. 265; 92 L. 2593. —— Persons contingently entitled ascertainable at future time.]—Testatrix gave all her real & residuary personal estate to trustees upon the usual trust for sale & conversion & directed her trustees to stand possessed of the trust fund, & the income therefore, upon trust for A., for her life & after her death for B. for his life, & after his death to pay the capital & income of the trust fund to the child or children of B., in equal shares with gifts over in default of issue of B. living at his death. One of the attesting witnesses to the will was B.'s wife, & accordingly, on the death of A., B. was by Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15, precluded from taking the income of the trust fund during his life. B. was the heir-at-law & one of the next of kin of testatrix. There had been no issue of B.'s marriage & his wife, the attesting witness, was fifty-eight years of age.

The question was, whether the income of the trust fund ought to be accumulated for the benefit of the persons who were contingently entitled to the corpus; or whether it ought, during the life of B., to be distributed between B., the heir-at-law, & the next of kin of testatrix, according as it arose from real or personal property. The trust fund was practically represented only by real estate of testatrix :—Held : the doctrine of acceleration did not apply, as until there were children of B., the gift in remainder upon the determination of B.'s life could not be accelerated; & as the gifts to the persons contingently entitled were to take effect at a future time, & could only be ascertained at a future time, there was no ground for accumulating the income for the benefit of such persons.—Re TOWNSEND'S ESTATE, TOWNSEND v. TOWNSEND (1886), 34 Ch. The residue was to be divided in the porportion of one share to each surviving child, & one share among the children of each deceasing child. The widow repudiated, immediately after the truster's death, her testamentary provisions, & elected to take her legal rights of terce & jus relictæ. One child died without issue on 1866. The period allowed by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), for accumulation came to an end in 1886, & in that year one of the children & the representative of the husband of the deceased child claimed, in contradiction to the contention of the other children, that the fund in respect of the widow's repudiation has vested a morte testatoris. The settlement contained an agreement & declaration that any share passing to the daughter under her father's will should, if she elected to claim under the will, be a satisfaction of the covenant. The father subsequently made a will, whereby he confirmed the covenant in the settlement, &, after a trust for payment of his debts directed his trustees to stand possessed of an equal share of his residuary estate upon trust for his daughter for life, & then for her children at twenty-one or marriage, in default of children for any husband of his daughter for life & subject thereto such share to fall into residue.

The daughter having elected against the will, the question arose whether her husband & children could claim under the will & as to their rights having regard to the provisions of the settlements & will.

The result of the daughter not claiming under the will was not to accelerate the interests of those claiming in remainder as if she had been an attesting witness to the will, & as before the event she could not be regarded as leaving or not leaving children there was held to be an intestacy as regards her life interest under the will.—Re VERNON, GARLAND v. SHAW (1906), 95 L. He gave the son power by will to appoint the income of the share to which he was entitled for life to any widow who might survive him for life, & declared that if the son should become bkpt. the trusts for payment of income to him should immediately cease & determine in the same manner "as if he were then actually dead." The son became bkpt., was married, but had no issue; & in 1888 the judge directed that the income should be accumulated till it appeared who was entitled to it. Twenty-one years having elapsed since the bkpcy., questions arose as to who was entitled to the accumulations & the future income during the son's life. The daughter claimed that her life interest expectant on the son's death had been accelerated:—Held: the words "actually dead" did not mean dead for all purposes, but only the son was no longer capable of himself taking any interest, & the daughter's life interest was not accelerated, the accumulations & income during the lifetime of the son, so far as they arose from the proceeds of real estate & impure personalty, were undisposed of & passed to the heir-at-law & next of kin respectively & so far as they arose from pure personalty passed under the residuary bequest.—Re COOPER, TOWNEND v. TOWNEND (1917), 86 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—EFFECT ON PRIOR INTERESTS—FAILURE OF CONTINGENT GIFT OVER.

2597. Whether prior gift divested—General rule.]—If testator were to devise to A. B. in fee, & to direct, that, in the event of A. B. dying in the lifetime of J. S., the estate should go over to a charity, it surely is perfectly clear, that, if A. B. died in the lifetime of J. S., he, A. B., or, rather, his heirs, would lose the estate. Testator could not give to the charity, without taking away from the devisee. Testator, therefore, in such a case, by his will says: "If A. B. dies in the lifetime of J. S., & I do not mean that A. B. or his heirs should any longer have the estate." The estate of A. B. is in such case defeated, not by the giving over of the estate to the charity, but by the happening of the event on which testator intended it should go over (PARKE, B.).—DOE d. 2600. —— ——.]—Specified freeholds & leaseholds were given by a will to trustees upon trust to permit the rents to be received by H. for life & after his death to convey to his children on their attaining twenty-one with a proviso that if H. charged or incumbered the property the gift to him should be absolutely forfeited & that in such case the gift in favour of his children should at once take effect & be acted upon by the trustees as thereinbefore directed. H., by a memorandum in writing in 1869, charged his life estate in favour of W. W. shortly afterwards on hearing of the clause of forfeiture & before he had taken any benefit under the charge, repudiated the security & obtained another security from H. In 1874 the trustee of the will by leave of the ct. in an administration suit filed a bill against persons who were in possession of the property under a title derived from a lessee of H., to make them account for the rents. H. had no children :—Held : the memorandum of charge produced a forfeiture of the life interest of H., although W. had never claimed any benefit thereunder & had afterwards disclaimed it & although H. had no children so that there were no persons to take under the gift over.

There are cases in which it is plain that the original gift was not intended to be defeated unless there were objects to take under the gift over, as, for instance, in cases of substitutionary gifts to children ; but here we have an intention separately declared that the gift is to be forfeited (JESSEL, M.R.).—HURST v. HURST (1882), 21 Ch. L. died, leaving no issue, having outlived both nieces, of whom H. had died leaving issue in the lifetime of R., who, however, left no issue. The question being whether the moiety of R. passed on her death to the other niece H., under the will, went as on an intestacy, or was not divested : —Held : the use of the word " survivor " imported the contingency of there being a survivor into the gift to R., & there being no survivor, although she died without leaving issue, her moiety was not forfeited, but the two nieces took absolutely.—Re DEACON'S TRUSTS, DEACON v. DEACON, HAGGER v. HEATH (1906), 95 L. 2613. Words describing event when gift comes into existence.]—A. by her will bequeathed a legacy of £100 to her nephew E. to be paid him within six months after he shall have fully served out his apprenticeship to which he is bound. E. ran away from his apprenticeship & afterwards died:—Held: his representative was entitled to this legacy with interest from the end of six months after the apprenticeship expired; for the serving out the apprenticeship was not to be considered as a condition annexed to the legacy, for the non-performance whereof the legacy would be forfeited; but was only an appointment of the time when the legacy should be paid.—SIDNEY v. VAUGHAN (1721), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 254; 1 E. R. 926, H. L.

2614. ——.]—A testator directed his trustees to invest his residuary estate, & suffer the interest to accumulate until the principal, together with the accumulation of interest, should amount to "£3,000 or thereabouts," & then to place out the same at interest, & pay the interest equally among certain specified legatees named in the will in equal shares during their lives & the life of the survivor; & in case any of them should happen to die leaving lawful issue, the issue were to be entitled to the same share in the interest to which their parents would, if living, have been entitled, & immediately after the decease of the survivor of the legatees specifically named, then upon trust, to pay the "£3,000 or thereabouts" equally among the lawful issue of the specified legatees to whom testator gave & bequeathed the same, but in case any of them should happen to be then dead leaving lawful issue, such issue were to be entitled to the share to which the parent or parents of such issue would, if living, have been entitled:—Held: the gift of the "£3,000 or thereabouts" was not void for uncertainty or remoteness, but the disposition of the income accruing between the expiration of the period allowed by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), & the end of the time required to accumulate the £3,000 was invalid, & the income for that period was undisposed of, & belonged to the next of kin.

It is argued that it is void for uncertainty on account of the words "or thereabouts" which follow the stated amount of the accumulated sum wherever it is named. I am not satisfied, however, that these superadded words introduce such uncertainty as to render the directions for accumulation void (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

Looking at this will, it cannot, I think, be doubted that testator intended the residue to go to the persons whom he has named; & I think, therefore, that following the cases to which I have referred, we must consider the words, relied on by the next of kin as importing condition or contingency, to have been intended merely for the direction of the trustees, as meant to describe the

W. devised to his brother C. for life, & in default of C. having issue living at the time of his death, to his next brother F. for life, & in default of F. having issue living at the time of his death, to his youngest brother P. in fee. F. died in the lifetime of C. leaving a son. C. died some years afterwards :—Held the words " should come to the possession " did not constitute a condition which, not having happened, prevented F.'s son from taking under the will, & so created an intestacy, but he took under the force of the limitation created in favour of his father.—EDGEWORTH v. EDGEWORTH (1869), L. 2625. —— ——.]—A. by his will limited his lands to E., his daughter, & H., her husband, for their lives, etc. ; remainder to their sons successively in tail ; remainder to M., his daughter, & F., her husband, for their lives, etc. ; remainder to their sons successively in tail ; with divers remainders over, including C. & his sons, & their issue ; & he declared & provided by the will, that in case M. or F., or the sons or son of F. & M., or either of them, should become entitled to the estate under the limitations of the will, a sum of £2,000 should be charged on the lands in possession, for the use of the younger children of C., in certain specific proportions. E. & H. died without issue. The sons of M. & F. died before the estate became vested in them ; & after the death of M. & F., & the expiration of the preceding life estates, G., a grandson of M. & F., became entitled under the limitations of the will to an estate tail :—Held : the lands having vested in a grandson, & not in a son of M. & F., were nevertheless liable to the charge created by the will in favour of the younger children of C.—GORE v. LORTON (LORD), LORTON (VISCOUNT) v. GORE (1828), 2 Bli. 2626. —— To pay daughters.]—A devise of land in borough English to a second son, he paying twenty pounds to each of the daughters of the devisor at their full age, is a condition & not a limitation ; but it is not broken, unless notice of their full age be given & a demand made—CURTEIS v. WOLVERSTON (1605), Cro. 2627. —— ——.]—Testator by his will after declaring his intention of disposing of all his estate, gives to his three daughters £550 to be paid in four years after his decease. He then devises his lands to trustees for ninety-nine years, upon trust, that if his wife should pay or secure to be paid the £550 in four years, then he gave the inheritance of the lands to his wife for life, & after her decease to his son & his heirs, male & female, & for want of such issue to his own right heirs for ever ; & desired that his trustees at the request of his wife or son should convey over the term to wait upon the inheritance. This is a conditional limitation in the wife, taking place as an executory devise, & the freehold descended to the son as heir at law to testator, till the four years were elapsed or his wife had performed the condition, as a part of the inheritance undisposed of ; & by this devise the son hath a good estate tail in the inheritance expectant on the determination of the term of ninety-nine years.—HAYWARD v. STILLINGFLEET (1737), West temp. Hard. 176 ; 1 Atk. 422 ; 25 E. 2628. —— To give security.]—A husband devises the use of all his plate & jewels to his wife during her widowhood, she giving security to leave the same to his daughter on her death or second marriage ; this is not a condition, but a limitation, & though the wife usually wore them ut ornamenta corporis sui, yet she cannot retain them as her paraphernalia, against this devise of the use of them only ; for the express declaration of the husband will control the implication which the law would otherwise have made.—HASTINGS (LORD) v. DOUGLAS (1634), Cro. 2630. —— Marriage with consent.]—A. had issue three sons & three daughters. The eldest daughter had issue B. The youngest daughter had issue C. A. devises an estate to his wife for life, " & after her death to B. & the heirs of her body : provided always & upon condition, that she marry with the consent of D. ; & in case she marry without such consent, or die without issue, then I bequeath the estate to C." This is a limitation, & not a condition ; & therefore if B. marry without the consent of D. it is a determination of the estate tail, & casts the possession upon C. by way of immediate remainder, although B. had no notice of this limitation previous to her marriage.—FRY v. PORTER (1670), 1 Mod. 2634. —— ——.]—A. devises a lease for years to his daughter for life, & if she should die before his son, then the remainder over to him, on his making such an allowance as certain persons should name. The daughter died possessed within the term. The son enters wihout any allowance having been named. Adjudged that the remainder over was void, for that the entire term vested in the daughter; but that if it had not, the estate limited to the son was upon a condition subsequent.—WOODCOCK v. WOODCOCK (1600), Cro. Eliz. 795; 78 E. R. 1025.

2635. ——— ———.]—T. devises copyhold lands he had surrendered to the use of his will to his wife for life, & after her decease to his son, S., till deft., his grandson, attained the age of twenty-three & as soon as he attained that age, gives it to him & his heirs, on condition that he pays to E. £60 within two years after he attains twenty-three, & in default of payment of the £60, then testator gave E. a power to enter & receive the rents till the £60 was paid. Testator died soon after making his will; E. married pltf., & deft. attained his age of twenty-three, but died within the two years after he attained that age.

I take it to be a conditional limitation & therefore whatever right E. gained thereby is a legal estate (per CUR.).—EMES v. HANCOCK (1743), 2 Atk. 507; 26 E. R. 705.

2637. ——— Wife surviving husband.]—Testator bequeathed £1,000 in trust for his daughter, a single woman, for her life for her separate use, independently of any husband with whom she might intermarry, &, after her death, in trust for her children, & if there should be no children, then, if she should survive any husband with whom she might intermarry, in trust for her, her exors., etc.; but if her husband should survive her, then in trust as she should by will appoint, & in default of appointment, in trust for her next of kin, as if she had died intestate, & without having married. The daughter died a spinster:—Held: the words, "if my daughter shall survive any husband with whom she may intermarry," were words of condition & not of mere limitation, &, consequently, the residuary legatees, & not the daughter's exor., became entitled to the £4,000 on her death.

In a case where the meaning of testator clearly is that the ultimate limitation should take effect on the failure of a preceding gift, & that gift does fail, but the language in which the limitation over is expressed does not, in terms, apply to the event which has happened, then, in my opinion, the limitation over should take effect (SHADWELL, V.C.).—LENOX v. LENOX (1839), 10 Sim. 400; 9 L. J. Ch. 83; 59 E. R. 670; sub nom. LENNOX v. LENNOX, 4 Jur. 5.

2638. ——— ———.]—Testator had three sons, J., T., & R. He devised to each, in the same form of words, a separate property for life, & after a son's death to his child or children in fee. In case any one of the sons should die without lawful issue, the property of such son was to be divided equally between the two survivors "in the same manner as the estates hereinafter devised are limited to them respectively; subject, nevertheless, to the proviso hereinafter mentioned." At the end of the three devises came the proviso in these terms: "Provided that in case any or either of my sons shall depart this life, leaving a widow, then I give the hereditaments & premises so specifically devised to such one or more of them so dying unto his widow & her assigns for & during the term of her natural life." The youngest son died unmarried. His two brothers divided his property between them. The eldest son died, & after him the second son, each leaving a widow but no child:—Held: each widow was entitled to a life estate in all that had been possessed by her husband during his life. The proviso is a limitation, & must be so construed.—GILES v. MELSOM (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 24; 42 L. J. C. P. 122; 28 L. T. 789; 21 W. R. 417, H. L.; revsg. S. 2639. ——— Direction as to sale of property for particular price—In specified event.]—A testator, by a codicil, after reciting that he had contracted to purchase certain land, & that his personalty might be deficient to enable his exors. to carry out the obligations of his will, directed them to realise any such deficiency by sale for not less than £8,000 of the L. farm; & in case they should be unable to obtain £8,000 for the farm, he bequeathed the farm upon certain conditions to his son, C., & in case they did sell & obtain £8,000 he directed £4,000 of the same to be invested in land for the benefit of C. upon the same conditions as he would have inherited the L. farm in case of non-sale. There was no deficiency, & the exors. did not sell:—Held: the intention of testator was not merely to protect C. from damage, but to benefit him to the further extent of at least £4,000, & that to carry out his intention the provision "in case of non-sale," might be construed as intended to apply to the case of a non-sale by reason of there being no deficiency of personalty.—WARDE v. PLUMB (1871), 40 L. J. Ex. 105; 24 L. T. 442, Ex. Ch.

2640. ———.]—Testatrix gave certain real & personal estate "upon trust for my third son, J., his heirs, & assigns; but if my said son should do, execute, commit or suffer any act, deed or thing whatsoever whereby or by reason or in consequence whereof, or if by operation of law, he would be deprived of the personal beneficial enjoyment of the said premises in his lifetime, then & in such case the trust hereinbefore contained for the benefit of my said son shall absolutely cease & determine, & the estates & premises hereinbefore limited in trust for him" should go & be held in trust for his wife, or, if no wife then living, for his children equally. J. survived his mother, & was still living, a bachelor:—Held: he took an absolute interest under the gift, & the attempted executory gift over was void for repugnancy.—Re DUGDALE, DUGDALE v. DUGDALE (1888), 38 Ch. 2642. —— Direction as to vesting.]—Testator devised real estate to trustees in fee upon trust for T. for life, with remainder to the use of the trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the first & other sons of S. successively in tail male, with remainders over. Testator directed that the real estate so devised should not vest in any person thereby made tenant for life or in tail until he should have attained the age of twenty-five years, & that the rents & profits were in the meantime to form part of the personal estate. He further empowered the trustees, so long as any person entitled to actual possession or to the receipt of the rents & profits of the real estate, should be under the age of twenty-five years, to apply part of the rents & profits for his maintenance & education:—Held: the direction as to the vesting amounted to a limitation of the estate, which was void for remoteness.—LUSHINGTON v. PENRICE, PENRICE v. LUSHINGTON (1868), 18 L. 2643. —— Bankruptcy of donee.]—Testator devised a freehold estate to the use of his daughter, "her heirs & assigns" for her separate use "subject, nevertheless, to the proviso hereinafter contained for determining her estate & interest in the event therein mentioned." In a subsequent part of the will was a proviso that in case his daughter should at any time be declared a bkpt., then & thenceforth the devise thereinbefore made to her should be void, & the premises should thenceforth go, remain & be to the use of her children:—Held: the devise did not operate as a conditional limitation, & the condition in the proviso was void for repugnancy; & accordingly the daughter was entitled to the property for an absolute estate in fee simple.—Re MACHU (1882), 21 Ch. She was at the date of the will & of testator's death living with her husband:—Held: the words as to living separate were not a condition either subsequent or precedent, which could be rejected leaving the legacy pure & simple, but formed part of the limitation of the gift; & the gift being a limited gift, the duration & commencement of which were fixed in a way not allowed by law, the whole gift was void.—Re MOORE, TRAFFORD v. MACONOCHIE (1888), 39 Ch. Testator directed that such legacies should be paid at the end of six months after the death of his sister, & he directed his trustees to stand possessed of the sum of £1,000, thereinbefore directed to be paid to them & charged on my Collingham estate," upon certain trusts. The question was, whether testator's nephew was liable to account for the occupation rent of so much of testator's real estate at North & South Collingham as was in his possession or occupation at the date of testator's decease for the period between that date & the completion of the sale of that estate by the direction of the ct., & with any profits made by him in respect of the crops & other produce of the estate during such period:—Held: testator's nephew was not a trustee of the legacies for the legatees, but the same were merely charged on the North & South Collingham estate; that being so, he was not liable to account for the back rents & profits thereof.—Re OLIVER, NEWBALD v. BECKITT (1890), 62 L. 2662. ——.]—The expression of an intention accompanying a bequest does not, necessarily, constitute a condition on which the bequest is to take effect, or be defeated. Testator may not do that which would fully effectuate his expressed intention, & yet the bequest may be valid. Testator left certain specified personalty to his wife for life, & after her death provided as follows: "I give & bequeath the same, etc., unto University College, London, for the purpose of founding in it a new professorship in Archæology, for the regulation of which professorship I purpose preparing a code of rules & regulations, which I intend to authenticate under my hand." As soon as convenient after his decease, the fact of his bequest & a copy of the rules were to be communicated to the college, & the college was, within twelve months afterwards, to signify in writing by the president, etc., the acceptance of the rules; & if the college should decline or refuse to accept the rules, or should not within twelve months signify acceptance thereof, the bequest of the stock & shares was to be wholly null & void, & the stock & shares were to sink into & form part of the residuary estate. Testator died without making any rules:—Held: the will contained a clear & valid bequest, which was not affected by the subsequent provisions, nor by the non-acceptance of intended rules & regulations, the acceptance of which had, by the act of the testator himself, been rendered impossible.—YATES v. UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON (1875), L. 2664. Testator devised certain estates to trustees upon trust to pay the rents, etc., to A. & B., his wife, for their lives, & after their decease to settle & assure the estates to the use of all & every the son & sons of A. & B. successively, for their respective lives, with intermediate remainders after the decease of each & every such son to the use of his first & other sons successively in tail male, with remainders over, with an ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. The will contained a proviso that if A. & B. or any of their children who might be entitled to the estates should reside in foreign parts for more than six months while in enjoyment of the rents & profits of the estates, or if any son or remoter issue of A. & B. should fail, as therein mentioned, to profess the Protestant religion, "then the devises in favour of A. & B. & their sons & remoter issue should cease & be absolutely void, so far as concerned the rights & interests of the party making default, but not further or otherwise." A tenant in tail male having come into possession, & both resided abroad & failed to profess the Protestant religion:—Held: (1) upon the true construction of the proviso testator had not shown an intention that the whole estate tail should determine, but that only the individual interest of the tenant in tail should cease, & yet the estate tail with all the remainders limited thereon continued for the benefit of those to whom testator intended the property to devolve after the death of the tenant in tail; (2) this intention of testator was one which could not legally be effected, &, consequently, the proviso was inoperative, & as to the operation of the proviso upon the ulterior remainders, assuming it to have amounted to a declaration that the whole estate tail should determine.—SEYMOUR v. VERNON (1864), 33 L. 2668. —— Both in expression & operation—Condition subsequent.]—When a trust is created to secure the devolution of chattels as heirlooms, any limitations which are to take effect by way of postponement or defeasance of an absolute interest are subject to all the rules which govern the validity of conditions subsequent. Such limitations, therefore, must be certain, not only in expression, but also in operation, & it is essential to their validity that it should be capable of ascertainment at any given moment of time, whether the limitation has or has not taken effect. Testator, who was a peer, bequeathed chattels to trustees, upon trust to permit & suffer the same to go & be held & enjoyed with the title, so far as the rules of law & equity would admit, by the person who for the time being should be actually possessed of the title, in the nature of heirlooms, & so that no person in existence at the time of testator's decease, or born in due time afterwards, & afterwards coming to the title, should have any other than a life interest in the same, & so that no person should acquire an absolute interest in the same till the expiration of twenty-one years after the decease of all such persons as should be in existence at the time of testator's decease & afterwards attaining the title:—Held: the latter clause of the limitations was void for uncertainty in operation, & the first person born after the death of testator who attained the title acquired an absolute interest in the chattels, notwithstanding that there was still living a person who was alive at the time of testator's death, & who was capable of inheriting the title.—Re EXMOUTH (VISCOUNT), EXMOUTH (VISCOUNT) v. PRAED (1883), 23 Ch. 2676. —— ——.]—A mansion & estate were devised to A. D., the wife of T. D., for life, remainder to pltf. for life, he not committing any waste by suffering the house, etc., to go out of repair, with remainder over. The will contained a proviso, that all & every the person & persons entitled to the possession of the estate should, while he or they should continue so entitled, reside in the mansion, & make the same his or their principal place of abode, & that in case any such person or persons should refuse or neglect to go to, or discontinue to reside & dwell at the mansion, the limitation to him or them should be void. Testator bequeathed his residuary personalty to be invested in lands to be settled to like uses. A. D., shortly after the decease of testator, became a widow, & she refused to reside at testator's mansion. Upon a claim, alleging the forfeiture of the estate by A. D., & praying the application of a portion of the personalty in performing necessary repairs & improvement of the mansion:—Held: the condition of residing & dwelling in a mansion was sufficiently certain to be enforced by forfeiture, & it applied to the female tenant for life as well as to the other devisees.—DUNNE v. DUNNE (1855), 7 De G. 2677. —— —— "Usual & common place of abode & residence."]—A clause of forfeiture in case of the devisee not making the mansion house "his usual & common place of abode & residence," is not void for uncertainty.

Testatrix devised an estate to A. for life, with divers remainders over. She provided that A., & every other person who should by her will "become possessed or entitled" to the estate, should make & use the mansion house as his "usual common place of abode & residence," & keep the same & the garden & desmesne lands thereto belonging in a suitable & proper state of repair, condition & cultivation. & in case A., or any other person who should be so possessed or entitled, should refuse or neglect to reside at & make use of the mansion house as his common place of abode & residence, or should wilfully suffer the same to fall into decay, or should convert or alter the garden or demesne lands to other purposes than those for which the same were then used & occupied, unless with the express consent of his trustees, then the limitation in his favour should cease:—Held: the trustees could not dispense with the condition as regarded residence, their power being limited to the case of an alteration of the garden & demesne lands.—WYNNE v. FLETCHER (1857), 24 Beav. 430; 53 E. 2678. —— —— "Permanent home."]—By her will dated in 1913 testatrix gave her dwelling-house to her niece, & she also bequeathed to trustees the sum of £7,000 upon trust for investment, & to pay the income to her said niece, "in order to enable her to reside in the dwelling-house . . . for & during the term of her natural life or until she shall voluntarily cease to make the said dwelling-house her permanent home without power of anticipation & after her death" testatrix directed her trustees to hold this sum & the investments representing it in trust for such person or persons for such purposes & in such manner as her niece should by deed or will appoint & in default as part of testatrix's residuary estate, "Provided, however, that in the event of my said niece voluntarily ceasing to make the said dwelling-house her permanent home as aforesaid, I direct that the said sum of £7,000 & the investments representing the same shall fall into residue":—Held: (1) the gift was to the niece for her life or until she voluntarily ceased to make the dwelling-house her permanent home, whichever first happened, & the provision against ceasing to make the house her home was not a condition subsequent; (2) the gift was not invalid either as being contrary to public policy or as being too uncertain; (3) if the niece, being a married woman, ceased to make the house her permanent home in pursuance of her husband's injunction & because he wished to make another house the matrimonial home, the legacy would not determine. 2680. Condition not to dispute will.]—Testatrix, by her will dated May 18, 1861, gave the usufruct of her estate to her son, applt., charged with certain annuities in favour of her daughters & sisters, subject to the following condition:—"Je veux et ordonne et ma volonte expresse est que si mes dites filles, ou aucune d'elles, venait à faire soit directement ou indirectement aucune demarche quelconque pour contester mon present testament, qu'alors et dans ce cas mes dites filles, ou aucune d'elles qui voudraient ainsi chercher a contester mon present testament, soient privées ou soit privée de tous droits quelconques dans ma dite succession, et de la rente viagère susdite, et que quant a celles ou celle qui voudrait contester mon dit testament, le legs a elle fait de la dite rente soit mon avenu et caduc; car telle est mon intention expresse."

One of the daughters, her husband being co-pltf. with her pro forma by protracted litigation, unsuccessfully impugned the will, as not having been duly executed, & as having been obtained by fraud & captation, & undue influence of applt. They obtained a decree of the Superior Ct.; avoiding the will on the ground of informal execution, which was reversed by the Ct. of Q.B. of Quebec; the Superior Ct. then on remand dismissed the suit, having decided the issues as to fraud & undue influence against them. Those issues were finally abandoned by their counsel in oral argument before the Privy Council.

In an action brought thereafter by resps. (the daughter & her husband) to recover from applt., in respect of the annuity charged upon the estate as above, in which applt. pleaded a forfeiture thereof by female resp. under the penal clause by reason of said litigation:—Held: according to the true construction of the clause, it was neither void for uncertainty, nor contrary to good morals, nor prohibited by any positive law, nor contrary to public policy.—EVANTUREL v. EVANTUREL (1874), L. 2682. Condition not to associate with specified relatives.] — Testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to K. for life, & after her death to divide the corpus among her children. By a codicil he declared that if she "shall in any way associate, correspond, or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces," etc., then the life interest was to be forfeited & a gift over was to take effect. On an originating summons taken out to ascertain the effect of the codicil upon the original gift:—Held: the condition was void for uncertainty.—JEFFREYS v. JEFFREYS (1901), 84 L. T. 417; sub nom. Re JEFFREYS, JEFFREYS v. JEFFREYS, 17 T. L. R. 356.

2683. Condition as to marriage with person of ample fortune—"To maintain her in comfort & affluence."]—W. devised & bequeathed all properties, real, freehold, & personal of which he might die entitled to trustees upon trust to pay to his wife during her natural life the annual income to arise from his estates, & subject to legacies to his two daughters & a son devised & bequeathed the residue of his estates & properties of every kind by way of contingent remainders to two of his sons & his two daughters respectively, & continued: "In case my dear wife M. should marry again a person of ample fortune to maintain her in comfort & affluence then I revoke the bequest of the life estate in my estates," & directed the provision made for his children to take effect on their reaching twenty-one years or sooner if his exors. approved, but in case all his children died before twenty-one, which did not happen, then he bequeathed to his wife all his property. Testator was a land agent, his annual income, exclusive of that derived from investments subject to the trusts of certain settlements, was about £150 derived from the management of landed estates, & he also was tenant pur autre vie of a residence & lands.

Some years after testator's death his widow intermarried with F., who it was admitted was a person of ample fortune, had settled £10,000, over which M. was given a power of appointment by will, was well able to maintain his wife in comfort & affluence, & in fact did so.

On a summons asking whether the life estate of M. had determined by her marriage with F.:—Held: deciding the case as a pure question of construction, & construing the words "comfort & affluence" with reference to testator's position in life, & to the fact that F. was in a position to maintain his wife in the state to which she had been accustomed, the defeasance of her life estate was not too vague to be enforced but was perfectly good.—Re MOORE'S TRUSTS, LEWIS v. MOORE (1906), 96 L. 2684. Condition to retain testator's name—On marriage.]—Testator directed that in the event of any of his daughters marrying, such daughter should retain the name of G. as an addition to the surname of her husband, & in the event of her failing to do so she should forfeit all benefits under the will:—Held: without further directions as to the manner in which the surname should be used, the forfeiture clause was void for uncertainty.—Re GASSIOT, BROUGHAM v. ROSE-GASSIOT (1907), 51 Sol. The farms were sold in a suit, under an order which reserved the question of the rights of the parties in respect of the proceeds, & realised £1,100 & £400, respectively. The exors. were dead. R. had never returned, & was still in New Zealand:—Held: the proceeds of the two farms should be divided into two equal parts, & that R. was entitled to be paid one moiety without returning to this country.—CROSKERY v. RITCHIE, [1901] 1 I. Before the money was handed over, J. had committed an act of bkpcy., which was followed by a receiving order & adjudication:—Held: the contingency was described with definite certainty, & consequently the gift over was not void for uncertainty, but took effect.—Re GOULDER, GOULDER v. GOULDER, [1905] 2 Ch. 100; 74 L. 2686. Condition against control of parent.]—Three-fourths of testatrix's residuary estate were given upon trust to pay the income to her two grandchildren up to Dec. 31, 1927, & then to divide the corpus between them. In case either grandchild should die before that date without leaving lawful issue his or her share was given to other persons, & the will then contained a declaration that if at any time on or before Dec. 31, 1927, either one or both of the grandchildren should "live with or be or continue under the custody, guardianship or control of their father . . . or be in any way directly under his control, all benefits, profits & income provided to be given under this my will to both or either one of them, as the case may be, shall thereby cease & determine, & it shall be at all times & under all circumstances an absolute condition of either one or both of them receiving any income, benefit or legacy under this my will that he or she or both of them shall separately & individually continue to live free from his direct influence & control." In case of forfeiture of the interest of a grandchild under this condition his or her forfeited share was to be held upon the trusts declared on the happening of the death of the grandchild before Dec. 31, 1927, without leaving lawful issue:—Held: (1) the clause was a condition in defeasance of an interest previously given; (2) it was void as being contrary to public policy, because it was inserted with the object of deterring the father from performing his parental duties, & also because it was an attempt to interfere with the discretion of the ct. as to the custody & maintenance of its wards; (3) the condition was bad on the ground of uncertainty.—Re SANDBROOK, NOEL v. SANDBROOK, [1912] 2 Ch. 471; 81 L. 2687. Condition against marriage with specified persons—Inaccurate description of persons.]—By his will testator made certain bequests of personalty & a devise of a freehold house in favour of his son, pltf., on his attaining twenty-five, & bequeathed the residue of his estate to the Public Trustee upon trust in certain events for testator's brother absolutely. By a first codicil made on the same day as the will testator directed that if his son should marry a certain lady therein named he should forfeit all benefits given by the will which should then devolve, according to the trusts of the residue, as if his son had died immediately after testator's death without attaining twenty-one & without leaving issue. By a second codicil testator extended the condition to marriage with a second lady therein named. Testator died in 1918, & in 1921 pltf. having attained twenty-one, married his present wife, who was not one of the ladies mentioned in the codicils. In Feb. 1924, he attained twenty-five, & became entitled on possession to the real & personal property bequeathed. Both the ladies mentioned in the codicils were living, & one had married, & her husband was still alive. Neither of the ladies was fully & accurately described in the codicils, as in both cases testator had omitted the second Christian name, & in one he had given the lady the surname of her step-father. But pltf. in his affidavit had identified the individuals intended. On a summons by pltf. asking whether the provisions in the codicils for forfeiture were valid, or void for uncertainty otherwise:—Held: (1) the condition was not void for uncertainty, nor illegal, inasmuch as it was only in partial restraint of marriage with particular persons; (2) the condition was also not impossible of fulfilment so long as pltf. & either of the two ladies survived; & therefore appct. took what was bequeathed to him subject to defeasance on breach of the condition at any time.—Re BATHE, BATHE v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE, [1925] Ch. 377; 133 L. 2692. ——— ———.]—Testator gave a legacy to trustees for the maintenance of A. & B. during their minority, " & when & so soon as the youngest child should have been born twenty-one years," to " pay & divide " it between them, if they should then both be living. But if either of them should be then dead, then he gave his moiety over to other persons. They both died before the youngest would, if living, have attained twenty-one, but A., the eldest, had attained that age :—Held : A. took a vested interest, & his representatives were entitled to a moiety.—Re SMITH'S WILL (1855), 20 Beav. 197 ; 24 L. 2693. ——— ———.]—Unless there is in a will, or some codicil thereto, a clear indication of an intention on the part of the testator, not only that his devisees are not to have the enjoyment of the property he has devised until they attain twenty-five, but that some other person is to have that enjoyment ; or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the devisees, up to the time of their attaining twenty-five, as to induce the ct. to hold that, as to the previous rents & profits, there has been an intestacy, the ct. does not hesitate to strike out of the will any direction that the devisees shall not enjoy it in full until they attain the age of twenty-five years.

Expressions in a codicil of testator's desire that real & personal property given by his will should not be enjoyed by any of the successive devisees till twenty-five, & direction to accumulate in the meantime :—Held : inoperative, there being no gift over.

The principle of this ct. has always been, to recognise the right of all persons who attain the age of twenty-one to enter upon the absolute use & enjoyment of the property given to them by a will, notwithstanding any directions by testator to the effect that they are not to enjoy it until a later age—unless, during the interval, the property is given for the benefit of another.

If the property is once theirs, it is useless for testator to attempt to impose any fetter upon their enjoyment of it in full so soon as they attain twenty-one ; & upon that principle, unless there is in the will, or in some codicil to it, a clear indication of an intention on the part of testator, not only that his devisees are not to have the enjoyment of the property he has devised to them until they attain twenty-five, but that some other person is to have that enjoyment, or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the devisees up to the time of their attaining twenty-five as to induce the ct. to hold, that, as to the previous rents & profits, there has been an intestacy—the ct. does not hesitate to strike out of the will any direction that the devisees shall not enjoy it in full until they attain the age of twenty-five years (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—GOSLING v. GOSLING (1859), John. 265 ; 5 Jur. He gave many legacies & annuities by thirteen codicils, which, if not paid, those who were to inherit his personal estate were to be subject to the penalties in his will, & his personal estate was to go to the next he had entailed it on. C. had several sons:—Held: subject to the prior life estates, the eldest son of C. took the personal estate absolutely.

It is the duty of the ct. to give effect to the intention of testators, as far as the rules of law will permit; but if testator uses words, which by their plain import give an absolute estate, the circumstance of his giving the same absolute estate to a succession of legatees, in a manner incompatible & inconsistent with the free enjoyment of the property plainly given to the first, will not authorise the ct. to alter the effect of the words by which that property is given.

The first legatee of a quasi estate tail in personalty takes the absolute interest, notwithstanding a manifest & avowed intention to give a succession of limited interests.

The words of a will must be construed with reference to the subject-matter, & the same words, even in the same sentence, may have one effect in their application to real estate, & another effect in their application to personal estate (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—BYNG v. STRAFFORD (LORD) (1843), 5 Beav. 558; 12 L. The sister occupied the estate for many years, together with other property purchased by herself, & she, by her will, disposed of the whole, certain portions of which she gave to L. for life, & then to the same J., his heirs, exors. & administrators, but with a like executory devise over, & a like prohibition against his cutting timber, & a proviso that he should keep the leaseholds fully estated with three lives. J. cut timber largely, & committed other waste, & upon his death without leaving male issue, the persons interested under the executory devise over filed this bill to make his estate liable for the waste committed:—Held: although, when there was such a devise as in the present case, the devisee might cut timber so that he did not commit destructive or equitable waste, yet, in the event of the executory devise over taking effect, the persons interested under it would be entitled to an account against his estate for all timber beyond what was required for necessary repairs, &, although the instrument creating the disposition declared that the breach of the prohibition should be on pain of forfeiture, still forfeiture was not the only remedy of the executory devisees.

There is nothing repugnant in annexing such a condition to an estate in fee for the benefit of an executory devisee, if it be annexed during the life of the first devisee only (TURNER, L.J.).—BLAKE v. PETERS (1863), 1 De G. The three sons accepted the bequest of the business upon the conditions expressed in the will. In Jan. 1891, M., one of the sons, retired & assigned his share in the business to his brothers. On Nov. 15, 1892, the two sons who had continued the business assigned it to a limited co. The co. & the debenture-holders appeared & submitted to the jurisdiction: —Held: the direction that the leasehold messuage should fall into the residue was not a condition repugnant to, but must be construed as part of & as qualifying, the previous absolute gift to the sons; it was not necessary that all three sons should carry on the business, & the retirement of one son & assignment of his share to the others was not a ceasing to carry on the business; but the sons ceased to carry it on when they assigned it to the co. for the purpose of its being carried on by the co., & the leasehold messuage then fell into the residuary estate.—Re SAX, BARNED v. SAX (1893), 62 L. 2731. —— ——.]—A condition in absolute restraint of alienation annexed to a devise in fee, even though its operation is limited to a particular time, e.g. to the life of another living person, is void in law as being repugnant to the nature of an estate in fee. Testator devised an estate to his son in fee, provided always that if the son, his heirs or devisees, or any person claiming through or under him or them, should desire to sell the estate, or any part or parts thereof, in the lifetime of testator's wife, she should have the option to purchase the same at the price of £3,000 for the whole, & at a proportionate price for any part or parts thereof, & the same should accordingly be first offered to her at such price or proportionate price or prices. The real selling value of the estate was, at the date of the will & at the time of testator's death, £15,000:—Held: the proviso amounted to an absolute restraint on alienation during the life of testator's widow; it was void in law; & the son was entitled to sell the estate as he pleased, without first offering it to the widow at the price named in the will.—Re ROSHER, ROSHER v. ROSHER (1884), 26 Ch. 2740. —— Executory devise — Alteration of course of devolution—At moment of devolution.]—Testator devised thirteen houses to his four sons, share & share alike, to hold subject to certain conditions. First, it was his will that none of the houses be disposed of, either by division, assignment, transfer, or sale, without the written consent of each & every of his four sons, their heirs, assigns, or representatives. Secondly, it was his will that, until the before-mentioned distribution of the property was made, the rents should come into one common fund & be divided equally among his four sons. Furthermore, it was his will that, if there should be no lawful distribution of the property during the life or lives of his four sons, it should then devolve to the children of his four sons; &, in case any of them should die without issue, then it was his further will that the share of the rents possessed by them or him should devolve to the widow or widows of such deceased son or sons, to be by them received during their widowhood, & afterwards it should devolve to the survivor or survivors of his other sons, that is to say to his grandchildren & to their heirs & assigns, to be divided equally among them:—Held: the four sons took the houses as tenants in common in fee, & the executory devise over to their children was void.

Primâ facie, & speaking generally, an estate given by will may be defeated on the happening of any event; but that general rule is subject to many & important exceptions. One of these exceptions may, in my opinion, be expressed in this manner, that any executory devise, defeating or abridging an estate in fee by altering the course of its devolution, which is to take effect at the moment of devolution & at no other time, is bad. The reason alleged for that is the contradiction or contrariety between the principle of law which regulates the devolution of the estate & the executory devise which is to take effect only at the moment of devolution, & to alter its course (FRY, J.).—SHAW v. FORD (1877), 7 Ch. SUB-SECT. 5.—ILLEGAL CONDITIONS.

2742. Whether valid—Condition creating new mode of devolution.]—A fund was settled in trust for W., the illegitimate daughter of the settlor, for life, & in the event, which happened, of her not at her death being under coverture, for her absolutely; with a proviso that if any estate, interest, or benefit should, under the powers & provisions of the settlement, be undisposed of, or in the events which should happen would but for the proviso be held in trust for the Crown, or belong beneficially to the Crown, then & in every such case the estate, interest or benefit should belong to & be held in trust for her father for life, & after his death, for her mother. W. having died intestate, the Crown claimed the fund:—Held: the fund vested absolutely in W., at her death, & the gift over was repugnant & void; & consequently the Crown was entitled to the fund.

The law of England has from the earliest times prohibited the introduction of new modes of devolution of property by operation of law. Of course a man can direct his property to go according to any series of limitations that he pleases, but he cannot create a new mode of devolution by operation of law. I therefore decide that the proviso is void as repugnant to law (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re WILCOCKS' SETTLEMENT (1875), 1 Ch. D. 229; 45 L. J. Ch. 163; 33 L. T. 719; 24 W. R. 290.

There is, in fact, a direction which is nothing more than a direction to the legatee not to carry out her contract, & is consequently bad (PARKER, J.).—Re WHARTON, WHARTON v. BARMBY (1910), 102 L. T. 531.

daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, & declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish & adopt the Christian, or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, & in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue & go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. J., a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. Pltf., one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both J. & pltf. were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held: the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy; it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, & therefore the share of J. was forfeited.—HODGSON v. HALFORD (1879), 11 Ch. 2751. —— Condition attached to gift to alien enemy—Gift over with provision for repayment.]—Testator, who died before Nov. 11, 1918, the date of the armistice in the war with Germany, gave the income of trust funds to German nationals for life, & directed (clause 23) that, if as the result of legislation owing to the war any beneficiaries who were German subjects were precluded from taking, their interests should be held in trust for other persons not German subjects till the German beneficiaries should be able by reason of further legislation to take, & he expressed a wish that the non-German beneficiaries would when the law allowed repay to the German beneficiaries the sums which would but for this clause have passed to them. Clause 25 provided that, if any person to whom a life interest in a trust fund was given should charge the income or by reason of any event the income would become charged in favour of other persons, his life interest should determine & the income be dealt with as if he were dead, subject to a discretionary trust in favour of him and others:—Held: (1) the true construction of clause 23 was that the life interests given to the German nationals were only till the Treaty of Peace came into force, & then ceased, & the Treaty had no operation to charge them; (2) the clause so construed was not against public policy; (3) in the circumstances, clause 25 did not apply.—Re SCHIFF, HENDERSON v. SCHIFF, [1921] 1 Ch. 149; 90 L. C. Conditions in Restraint of Marriage.

(a) General Restraint.

2763. Whether valid—Condition annexed to estate tail.]—(1) A condition annexed to an estate tail that the donee shall not marry is void for without marriage he cannot have an heir of his body. It is otherwise of a fee passed on such condition for the collateral heir may inherit.

(2) A condition annexed to any particular estate as for years, life, or in tail that he shall not commit felony, treason, or any treasonable act is good.—ANON. (1574), Jenk. 243; 145 E. R. 171.

2764. —— Condition annexed to estate in fee.]—ANON. (1574), No. 2763, ante.

2765. —— Condition in terrorem.]—Testator bequeathed to A. "should she survive, & continue unmarried, all his goods, chattels, estate & effects, at the time of his death, to use, occupy & possess the same during the term of her natural life, & from & immediately after her death," he disposed of the same. A. married. The condition held to be only in terrorem.—MARPLES v. BAINBRIDGE (1816), 1 Madd. 590; 56 E. R. 217.

2766. —— Condition precedent.]—Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his daughter upon trust for her maintenance & support until she attained twenty-one or married with the consent of his trustees under that age, & upon her attaining such age or her marriage, for her separate use, with remainder to her children; & in case of her death without issue, he bequeathed the same to certain legatees in remainder. Testator afterwards declared by a codicil that, in consequence of a nervous debility, his daughter was unfit for the control of herself, & his will was that she should not marry, & in case of her marriage or death, he gave the property he had bequeathed to her over to the same legatees in remainder:—Held: the limitation over by the codicil, being in general restraint of marriage, was void as to the life interest of the daughter.

In the English law a distinction has been taken between the cases in which the restraint operates as a condition precedent, & those in which it is expressed to take effect as a condition subsequent. A distinction has also been made as to whether it is a particular restraint, a partial & reasonable restraint, or whether it is a general restraint; & the decision is generally made to depend upon the question whether there is a gift over or no gift over. In Stackpole v. Beaumont, No. 3031, post, LORD LOUGHBOROUGH appears to have said that, such was the state of the authorities, a judge could not be considered to act too boldly whichever side of the proposition he should adopt. There are some points, however, which seem clearly settled, according to the law as administered in cts. of justice in this country; one is, that if the restraint is a general restraint, & the condition is subsequent, then the condition is altogether void, PART XIII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 6.—C. (a).

q. General rule.]—Conditions imposing a general restraint on marriage, including remarriage, are void except where such conditions are imposed, not from a general objection to marriage, but for some reason special with reference to the legatee.—CARRODUS v. CARRODUS, [1913] V. L. R. 1.—AUS.

r. Whether valid—Condition that share of devise lapses if daughter married.]—STURROCK v. RANKIN'S TRUSTEES (1875), 2 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 850.—SCOT.

& the party retains the interest given to him, discharged of the condition; that is, supposing a gift of a certain duration, & an attempt to abridge it by a condition in restraint of marriage, generally the condition is, primâ facie, void, & the original gift remains. But, until I heard the argument of this case, I had certainly understood that, without doubt, where property was limited to a person until she married, & when she married then over, the limitation was good (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—MORLEY v. RENNOLDSON, MORLEY v. LINKSON (1843), 2 Hare, 570; 12 L. 2767. —— ——.]—(1) All general restraints upon marriage are void by the law & practice of cts. in this country, as against the policy of the law.

Where testatrix had bequeathed her property to her sister, M., for life, & at her death, in remainder to her niece B., subject to an annuity to her sister P., "but if her niece B. should be married at the time of her sister M.'s death," then, at her sister M.'s death, to her sister P., for life, in remainder to relations:—Held: the limitation of the bequest to the niece B., being a condition precedent, not subsequent, was not in general restraint of marriage, &, the niece B., having married during the lifetime of the sister M., the next of kin, in remainder, were entitled to administration & to the property.

(2) Where a condition is subsequent, it operates in the nature of a penalty, as a forfeiture.

(3) A gift until marriage may be good, & a limitation over, in such case, perfectly good.—GODFREY v. HUGHES (1847), 1 Rob. Eccl. 593; 5 Notes of Cases, 499; 163 E. R. 1147.

2770. —— ——.]—A covenant to pay to E. during her life, subject to the proviso thereinafter contained, an annuity of £40; the proviso being that, in case E. should at any time thereafter happen to marry, the annuity should thenceforth be reduced to £20 only, which sum should in such case be paid & payable to E. from the time of her marriage for the remainder of her life:—Held: to be, in effect, a covenant to pay an annuity of £40 until marriage, & afterwards an annuity of £20 only: the proviso for reducing the annuity being part of the original gift itself, & not operating as a condition subsequent so as to be void as in restraint of marriage.

There can be no doubt that marriage may be made the ground of a limitation ceasing or commencing (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—WEBB v. GRACE (1848), 2 Ph. 701; 41 E. R. 1114; sub nom. GRACE v. WEBB, 18 L. J. Ch. 13; 12 Jur. 987, L. C.

2772. —— —— Intention to protect child of testator.]—Testator directed his trustees to pay an annuity to a single woman, by whom he had an illegitimate child, during her life, provided that she should continue single, & that she should neither cohabit nor have connection with any man; his reason being that if she were to marry, her child would be neglected; & for a further reason, that no man should have the spending of his hard-earned money. The annuitant having married:—Held: the proviso against marriage was valid, the condition being incorporated with the gift, & the object being to protect the child of testator.—POTTER v. RICHARDS (1855), 24 L. J. Ch. 488; 1 Jur. N. S. 462; 3 W. R. 266.

Annotation:—Consd. Re Hewett, Eldridge v. Iles, [1918] 1 Ch. 458.

2773. —— —— ——.]—A condition subsequent in a will in restraint of the marriage of a single woman is not absolutely but only primâ facie void; & if the intention of testator is to promote, not celibacy, but some other lawful object, the condition may be good.

Testator bequeathed to a woman who was living under his protection an annuity of £1,200 a year, with a declaration that if she should marry after his death she should be paid an annuity of £800 in lieu thereof, & he directed after her marriage his trustees should apply an annuity of £400 a year for the benefit of his son by this woman. The woman having married after the death of testator:—Held: (1) in making these provisions the intention of testator was not to restrain the woman from marrying but to provide for his child in the event of her marriage, & therefore, even if the declaration was a condition subsequent, it was not void, but operated to reduce her annuity from £1,200 to £800; (2) the declaration was valid as being on its true construction not a condition subsequent but a conditional limitation.—Re HEWETT, ELDRIDGE v. ILES, [1918] 1 Ch. 458; 118 L. 2774. —— —— Condition annexed to gift of income from mixed fund.]—A condition subsequent in restraint of marriage is void if annexed to a gift of the income arising from a mixed fund consisting of the proceeds of sale of real estate & pure personal estate. Semble: such a condition is also void if the gift be of income of a fund arising from the proceeds of sale of realty only.—BELLAIRS v. BELLAIRS (1874), L. 2776. —— —— Condition annexed to gift of realty—Intention to provide for devisee while single.]—A devise of realty saddled with a proviso that the devisee shall remain single, & a limitation over in case of marriage, is not void as against public policy, unless it appears that the intention of the devise was actually to prevent marriage, & not merely to provide for the devisee while single.

There is no distinction between a condition subsequent & a conditional limitation in restraint of marriage in a devise of real property.

Testator bequeathed an interest in land to M., "provided M. shall remain in her present state of single woman; otherwise, if she shall alter her present state of single woman & bind herself in wedlock, she is liable to lose her share of the property immediately, & her share shall be enjoyed by the other mentioned parties, share &

(b) Partial Restraint.

2778. Whether valid—Condition against marriage with particular class—Scotsman.]—J. devised real & personal estate to trustees, to pay thereout an annuity to his wife for life, & out of the residue to pay sufficient for the maintenance, education, & support of his only daughter, until she should attain the age of twenty-one years, or marry; & when she should attain twenty-one, or marry, then to her in fee: but in case his daughter should die under age & unmarried, then the estates to go to his wife for life; &, after her decease, to the two children of his nephew, as tenants in common in fee with a proviso, that if either his wife or daughter should marry a Scotsman, then his wife or daughter so marrying should forfeit all benefit under his will, & the estates given to such his wife or daughter as should so marry should descend to such person or persons as would be entitled under his will in the same manner as if his wife or daughter were dead :—Held: such partial restraint of marriage was legal; & the daughter having while under age married a Scotsman & died, leaving a son; such son could not inherit, nor her husband be tenant by the curtesy; but the limitations over, testator's wife being also dead, to the two children of testator's nephew, which nephew was still living, took effect immediately on such marriage; they being the persons designated by the will to take in the event which had happened; testator having considered such prohibited marriage the same as the death of his daughter under age unmarried.—PERRIN v. LYON, LYON v. GEDDES (1807), 9 East, 170; 103 E. 2779. —— —— Cousins.]—The will contained a proviso that, in case any one of testator's sons should marry or illegally cohabit with certain of their cousins, then & in every such case as well the original as every accruing share or shares of the son or sons so intermarrying or illegally cohabiting as aforesaid should go over & be in trust for all & every the person or persons who, under the trusts & directions of the will, would have been entitled thereto, in case the son or sons so intermarrying or illegally cohabiting as aforesaid had died under the age of twenty-one years, & he declared that it should not be lawful for his trustees to pay to his sons the amount thereby bequeathed, or to permit them to enter upon the possession of the lands thereby devised, until they should have respectively given & executed to his trustees a bond in the penal sum of £20,000 that they respectively would not intermarry or illegally cohabit with their cousins :—Held: the direction with regard to the bonds would not be enforced by the ct.; & the trustees were directed to transfer the residuary shares of the sons, without requiring them to enter into such bonds.—POOLE v. BOTT (1853), 11 Hare, 33; 1 Eq. Rep. 21; 22 L. J. Ch. 1042; 21 L. T. O. S. 262; 17 Jur. 688; 1 W. R. 276; 68 E. R. 1175.

2780. —— —— New Zealand native.]—Testator gave real & personal estate to his trustees upon trust for his son for life, & after his death upon trust "for all & every or such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the child or children & remote issue born in wedlock of his son provided he should marry an English lady or one approved of by testator's trustees, not being a New Zealand native" as he should appoint, & in default of such appointment" upon trust for all & every the children of his, testator's, son to be divided between them if more than one in equal shares as tenants in common or the whole to one only child as the case might be & in default of such issue over :—Held: the children of a marriage between testator's son & a woman, concerning whom there was not sufficient evidence before the ct. to show that she was not a New Zealand native, were entitled to the property under the gift in default of appointment.—ARMITAGE v. ARMITAGE (1868), 16 W. R. 643.

2781. —— —— Domestic servant.]—Testatrix devised real estate to her father for life, remainder to her brother for life, remainder to his first & other sons in tail, with remainders over. She then bequeathed the proceeds of her residuary personalty in trust for her brother absolutely. But she declared, if her brother should thereafter, whether he should at the time be in possession as tenant for life or not, marry a domestic servant, or a person who had been a domestic servant, then the devises & bequests in favour of her brother & issue should be null & void, & in lieu thereof, she devised her real estate to the use of pltfs., & declared that the personalty was to be held & enjoyed with a specific part of the realty. The father survived testatrix & died. Thereupon the brother became entitled to the realty as tenant for life in possession. Afterwards the brother married a person who at the time of her marriage was, & had previously been a domestic servant :—Held: the condition was valid, & the real estate passed to pltf.—JENNER v. TURNER (1880), 16 Ch. 2782. —— —— Blood relation.]—Testator, by his will, directed that his trustees should stand possessed of his residuary estate upon trust to pay the income to his son J. for his life, & on his decease upon trust to pay the capital to his child or children & equally between them if more than one, provided J. "does not marry a relation by blood, as I wish to mark my great objection to marriage between blood relations; & in the event of my son not leaving a child or children surviving him who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or in the event of his marrying a blood relation," then upon certain other trusts. Testator died on June 18, 1924 :—Held: the condition, although in terms only a partial restraint on marriage, was of such a nature that it would lead to the probable prohibition of marriage, & was void accordingly.

J. could contract no marriage with a supposed stranger, except subject to the risk that should a common ancestor be traced, the provision for defeasance would operate. He could only be certain that he was marrying a blood relation, he could never be certain that he was not.—Re LANYON, LANYON v. LANYON, [1927] 2 Ch. 264; 96 L. J. Ch. 487; 137 L. T. 806; 43 T. L. 2783. —— Condition against marriage with named person.]—Bequest in trust for A. for life, if he should not marry Harriett B., & after such forfeiture should have taken place, & after the decease of A., in trust for the widow of A., except as aforesaid, & A.'s children by any other woman than Harriett B. 2785. —— Condition against marriage under specified age.]—A father by will gave his daughter an annuity, & also in case she did not marry before the age of twenty-eight, a legacy of £1,000. By a codicil on the same paper, he gave her "furthermore" £5,000 "upon the terms hereinbefore mentioned." A suitor of the daughter wrote to testator after the date of his will, & before she attained twenty-eight, proposing to marry her, in answer to which testator stated what provision he meant to make for her in his lifetime, but did not mention the above-intended testamentary dispositions. He added, that the marriage had his qualified consent, but that he must hear from his daughter before he made it absolute. The daughter wrote to testator expressing her consent, to which, being very ill, he replied, that he could not appoint a time to attend to business. He shortly afterwards died without making any further communication on the subject, & subsequently the marriage took place before the daughter attained twenty-eight:—Held: (1) the £5,000 was subject to the same condition as the £1,000; (2) testator had not given an unconditional consent to the marriage; (3) even if the consent to the marriage ought to be considered as having become absolute, the daughter was not entitled to the £1,000 or £5,000.

It appears to me that the two legacies of £1,000 & £5,000 are given in the same manner & on the same terms & conditions in all respects. If the condition on which the present contention arises was precedent, I think that it was valid, & that its performance has become impossible, & that, therefore, the gift cannot take effect. If it was subsequent, it was, in my opinion, reasonable & valid; it has not been testamentarily waived, &, supposing it capable of being otherwise waived, it has not, in my judgment, been so waived. In saying this I assume testator's consent to the marriage to have been absolute; for, in my view, its being absolute is immaterial, in such a case & under such testamentary dispositions as those before us (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).—YOUNGE v. FURSE (1857), 8 De G. F. died seised, leaving his wife surviving, & she continued seised of such rentcharge until the half-yearly payment thereof was in arrear to her, & pltf. to prevent a distress upon his goods paid her the amount of the rent:—Held: the words in the will were a condition subsequent in defeasance of the estate in the rentcharge, & not a condition precedent, & therefore plaintiff was not bound to aver performance of the conditions, but breach thereof ought to be shown by the defts.—BROOKE v. SPONG (1846), 15 M. & W. 153; 15 L. Such a condition [against remarriage] is not void as to the wife, the law recognising in a husband such an interest in his wife's widowhood as to make it lawful for him to restrain her from making a second marriage by imposing a condition that on such marriage any provision he may have made for her shall cease (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—LLOYD v. LLOYD (1852), 2 Sim. 2802. Whether valid—Condition to live with mother in case of separation.]—Testator bequeathed one-fourth of his estate in trust for his daughter for life & then for her children who should survive her & testator, & attain twenty-one, but he declared that if at any time his daughter & her husband should be living separately from each other, only such of their children, who, being under twenty-one, should permanently reside with or be under the sole control of his daughter should be entitled to any benefit under the will, & if no child should become entitled, the daughter's share was to be held in trust for certain other beneficiaries:—Held: the above-mentioned condition was invalid, & notwithstanding its non-performance, the daughter's children were entitled, on surviving their mother, to a share in the testator's estate.—Re MORGAN, DOWSON v. DAVEY (1910), 26 T. Upon non-compliance with such condition in the case of any such child, his or her share was to be forfeited, & accrue to the shares of the other children, with a gift over in the event of non-compliance in the case of all of them. At the date of testator's death in 1917 the son had two infant children, whose mother was of German origin:—Held: the condition was a condition subsequent, "abroad" meant anywhere outside the British Isles, the non-compliance referred to meant the non-compliance of the parents, &, so interpreted, the condition, though not too uncertain to be enforced, was void as being contrary to public policy, & tending to the possible separation of the parents from their children.—Re BOULTER, CAPITAL & COUNTIES BANK v. BOULTER, [1922] 1 Ch. 75; 91 L. 2806. Condition dependent on acquisition of title—Peerage.]—(1) The Earl of Bridgewater by his will devised very large real estates to trustees to make a settlement according to the limitations mentioned in the will. One of these limitations was "to Lord Alford for & during the term of ninety-nine years, if he shall so long live"; remainder to trustees during his life to preserve contingent remainders; "remainder to the use of the heirs male of his body, with remainder, in default of such issue, to the use of C. for the term of ninety-nine years, if he shall so long live"; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; "remainder to the use of the heirs male of the body of C., subject, nevertheless, as to the several uses & estates so to be limited to Lord Alford & C., & to the trustees during their respective lives, & to the heirs male of their respective bodies, to the several provisoes for the determination thereof hereinafter contained." Testator then declared "that in the settlement to be made pursuant to this my will, my estates are not to be limited successively to the use of the first & other sons of Lord Alford or of C. in tail male, but to the heirs male of their respective bodies, in the words of this my will, it being my intention that the vesting of my estates in the heirs male of the respective bodies shall be suspended during the lives of Lord Alford & C. respectively." Testator then provided, "that if Lord Alford shall die without having acquired the title of Duke or Marquis of Bridgewater to him & the heirs male of his body, then, & in such case, the use & estate hereinbefore directed to be limited to the heirs male of his body shall cease & be absolutely void." There was a similar proviso as to Lord Alford acquiring such title within five years after he should succeed to be Earl Brownlow, & unless he did so, testator directed that the estate limited, etc. (as before) "shall thenceforth cease & be absolutely void; & my real estates hereinbefore devised shall thereupon go over & be enjoyed according to the subsequent uses & limitations declared & directed by this my will, as if Lord Alford were actually dead without issue male." Lord Alford entered into possession of the estates, but died without acquiring either of the titles, leaving an heir male:—Held: the estate thus created in favour of Lord Alford's heirs male was not affected by the proviso, which was a condition subsequent, & which was void, as being against public policy.

(2) It has already been shown . . . that no man can attach any condition to his property which is against the public good. For instance, the case . . . of a man making a condition that his devisee shall not cultivate his arable land. That is void, because it is against the prosperity of the country (CROMPTON, J.).—EGERTON v. BROWNLOW (EARL) (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N. S. 193; 23 L. J. Ch. 348; 21 L. T. O. 2807. —— —— Baronetcy.]—It is not the law that all conditions dependent on the acquisition of a dignity are contrary to public policy.

Testator by his will directed, in the events which happened, that the capital of his residuary estate, on the determination of certain prior trusts affecting the income thereof, should go to & vest in testator's sole surviving son if he should have acquired the title of baronet or other title superior thereto; but if he should not have acquired the title of baronet or other title superior thereto the residue was to be divided in equal moieties between the British Treasury & the Treasury of British India:—Held: the conditional gift to the son was not void as being contrary to public policy, but was capable of taking effect on the fulfilment of the condition.

We have to consider a disposition of property depending on the requisition of a baronetcy. . . . A. baronetcy is a barren title involving on the part of its holder the performance of no duties to the State or to the public, except those which are cast upon every good citizen. In this respect it differs most materially from a peerage (WARRINGTON, L.J.).—Re WALLACE, CHAMPION v. WALLACE, [1920] 2 Ch. 274; 89 L. J. Ch. 450; 123 L. T. 343; 36 T. L. R. 481; 64 Sol. Two years before testator's death a dispute had arisen between him & his nephew as to some cottages. Testator distrained on the tenants & they replevied, & after testator's death the nephew distrained, & it was determined in a consolidated action that the cottages belonged to testator:—Held: there was no forfeiture, the proceedings of the nephew being defensive, & the proviso pointing to acts subsequent to testator's death.

It is clear that this is not a mere clause in terrorem, because testator directs the forfeited share to fall into his residue, which is given over to the exclusion of the persons "debarred as aforesaid" (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WARBRICK v. VARLEY (No. 2) (1861), 30 Beav. 347; 54 E. R. 923.

But in case G. should die without issue before attaining twenty-one, then the said part of the real estate, together with the £7,000, was to sink into & become part of the residue, & to go according to the disposition thereof, thereafter in the will expressed. Testator died in 1845. B. did not send in his accounts till 1850, when he claimed a balance due to himself thereupon. In May, 1850, B. filed his bill for the annuity, alleging that he could not make out better accounts without documents in defts.' possession:—Held: irrespective of the question whether an agreement had been made to allow B. a commission, & irrespective also of the question whether the production of accounts to the satisfaction of the exors. was a condition precedent or subsequent to B.'s right to enjoy the annuity, the accounts between B. & testator's estate ought to be taken by this ct. in this suit, inasmuch as the estate could not be properly cleared while the contingent claim to the legacy was suspended over it.—BROGDEN v. MERTON (1853), 22 L. After G.'s death, A. & her husband signed a letter wherein they positively refused both to sell the share, & to make the settlement directed. Upon special case for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: provisions of forfeiture are to be construed strictly, & both of the provisions in this case were nugatory & void; for G. though he had clearly defined his intention upon the happening of either of two events, had given no indication of his intention upon the simultaneous occurrence of both.—ORMEROD v. RILEY (1865), 13 L. After his death, the charge on the B. estate having been established, the £10,000 was applied in paying it off. Subsequently, his other personal estate having proved insufficient for payment of his debts, a decree was made for refunding the £10,000 out of the B. estate ; but it was disputed whether the whole of it was wanted for payment of debts : —Held : the disposition in favour of the D. estate was upon a condition which was not apportionable ; & unless the B. estate got the full benefit of the £10,000, the owners of the D. estate had no title to throw any part of the £13,000 on the B. estate.—CALDWELL v. CRESSWELL (1871), 6 Ch. 2873. —— —— Marriage valid.]—In order to keep her second marriage secret, a widow, whose life interest under her first husband's will ceased on remarriage, was married before a registrar in her maiden name, the previous statutory notice given under Marriage & Registration Act, 1856 (c. 119), s. 3, being false to the knowledge of both spouses in this & other respects:—Held: the marriage was valid & the widow's life interest had ceased.—Re RUTTER, DONALDSON v. RUTTER, [1907] 2 Ch. 592; 77 L. 2874. Gift to surviving wife "so long as she continues unmarried"—Divorce of wife—Wife surviving husband & remaining unmarried.]—Testator by his will devised freehold & leasehold estates to trustees upon trust out of the rents & profits arising therefrom to pay an annual sum to his son & his son's wife E. jointly, & if his son predeceased E., to E. "so long as she continues unmarried." Before his son's death his son obtained a divorce from E. He was now dead, & E. had not been remarried. On an application that the receiver might be directed to pay E. the arrears unpaid since her husband's death, & continue to pay the annuity:—Held: the phrase "so long as she continues unmarried" was not equivalent to "during widowhood," &, although E. was not a widow, as she was the "E" named in the will, & was unmarried, she was entitled to the annuity so long as she remained unmarried.—KNOX v. WELLS (1883), 48 L. T. 655; 31 W. R. 559.

2875. —— Marriage declared null & void—Wife surviving husband.]—Testator, after giving a legacy of £200 to his wife, directed his trustees "in addition thereto to pay to my said wife, so long as she shall continue my widow & unmarried, an annuity of £300, or otherwise in lieu & in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife if she shall prefer it, a legacy of £2,000." After the date of the will the marriage was declared null by the Divorce Ct., in a suit brought by the wife against testator. After this testator died leaving the lady surviving. The judge held that she was entitled to the legacy of £200, but was not entitled either to the annuity or the £2,000. She appealed from this decision so far as it was unfavourable to her:—Held: although if the lady had been testator's wife at his decease the words "shall continue my widow & unmarried," might have been in substance the same as "shall continue unmarried," the reference to widowhood could not on that ground be treated as surplusage, but was the principal part of the condition, & as the lady did not at testator's death fill the position of testator's widow, she could not take the annuity.—Re BODDINGTON, BODDINGTON v. CLAIRAT (1884), 25 Ch. H. Conditions relating to Residence.

2879. Intention to reside—Whether sufficient.]—Under a devise to a party of premises for life, provided he chooses to reside therein, & then to A. in fee, it is not necessary to complete A.'s right to the premises on the death of the devisee for life, that such devisee should have actually resided in the premises. The intention to reside, & which intention would have been carried into effect had circumstances permitted, is sufficient.—ROE d. SAMPSON v. DOWN (1787), 2 Chit. 529.

2880. Nature of residence required—Whether personal residence necessary—Whether sleeping on premises necessary.]—A person may be said to have more than one residence. If he have houses in different places, at each of which he keeps an establishment, each may be called his residence, though he may not go there for years. But the meaning of the word "residence" is different from "domicil," for an infant has the domicil of his parents until he attains his full age & does some act to acquire a new one, & thus his domicil may be in a country in which he has never personally been; whereas "residence" implies personal presence at some time or other.

A proviso in a will, requiring the devisee for life of a mansion house, & estates to "reside" there for six months in every year, & imposing a penalty for breach of such condition; & if he should neglect to observe it for five years, devising the estate to others, rendered it necessary for the devisee to be personally present in the house one hundred & sixty-eight days in each year, in order to escape the penalty or forfeiture:—Held: it would be sufficient if, keeping up an establishment at the house, he were merely to visit it each day, & it was not necessary for him to spend a night there.—WALCOT v. BOTFIELD (1854), Kay, 534; 2 Eq. Rep. 758; 23 L. T. O. S. 127; 18 Jur. 570; 2 W. R. 393; 69 E. R. 226.

After G.'s death "or his failing to take such possession as aforesaid & to reside in" the house, testator devised the same to G.'s first & other sons in tail male. G. entered & took possession within six months after testator's decease; but as to residence, during the year following the expiration of the six months, he was in the house for eighteen days only; & from Jan. 1 to Dec. 28 in the year following the date of such expiration, for no more than twenty-four days. He had, however, placed the house in charge of a staff of servants, he had paid the rates, he had kept horses & poultry in the stables & on the grounds, & his son, who was at college near, had stayed at the house on an average on every alternate Saturday till Monday:—Held: no forfeiture of G.'s life estate had taken place.—Re MOIR, WARNER v. MOIR (1884), 25 Ch. 2883. —— ——.]—By his will testator gave his leasehold house, No. 33, Turner Road, Lee, to his trustees, upon trust to permit his niece C. to hold & occupy the same free of rent, but subject to a proviso thereinafter mentioned, "& to her residing upon the premises during her lifetime." In a subsequent part of the will testator directed that the use & occupation of the house aforesaid were given by him upon the express condition that after his decease C. should "remain single & unmarried," & in the event of her marrying she was to forfeit the bequest, & it was to fall into the residue.

C. resided in the house until her marriage & for some ten years afterwards, & then her husband took another house in the neighbourhood, & she moved into it with him. She let all the rooms but one at No. 33, Turner Road, to a weekly tenant, & in this reserved room she kept a bed always ready for use, her books, some clothes, writing materials, etc., & she retained the key of this room & also one of the outside door of the house. She went there two or three times a week, & occasionally had meals & slept there:—Held: (1) "residing" meant "personally residing," & what C. had done at No. 33, Turner Road, did not amount to residing within the meaning of the will; (2) reading the subsequent void condition in restraint of marriage into the condition as to residence for the purpose of construing the will, the words "residing during her lifetime," must mean during her lifetime while she was capable of residing, namely, as a spinster; &, therefore, upon her marriage, the condition as to residence did not apply, & there was no forfeiture.—Re WRIGHT, MOTT v. ISSOTT, [1907] 1 Ch. 231; 76 L. He further devised another portion of his real estate to his wife for her life, & then to his son R., on condition that R. should pay the balance of £2 a year & keep his son A. in board & lodging during his natural life:—Held: the intention of testator was to provide for A. from the time of testator's death, & R.'s land was chargeable with such £2 a year, & the board & lodging from that time, notwithstanding the tenancy for life.—MUNSIE v. LINDSAY, 10 P. The mother took her children to India during their infancy, but returned to England four years afterwards. The son, having obtained a commission in the Army shortly after his return, joined his regiment in India. Afterwards, & whilst he was still under twenty-one, he returned to England on account of illness, & remained there about three years, & then, having attained twenty-one, he joined his regiment in India:—Held: the son had incurred neither a forfeiture of his legacy, nor a reduction of his allowance.—SCHNELL v. TYRRELL (1834), 7 Sim. 86; 58 E. T. his son, &, there being subsisting accounts between them, by will gave him an annuity of £600 on condition he should, within three months, execute a release of all demands on his estate; the release tendered including the two annuities granted during the life, P. T. the son did not forfeit his annuity of £600 by refusing to execute it, but a release settled by the master, omitting those annuities, being tendered & refused:—Held: he forfeited the annuity under the will.—TAYLOR v. POPHAM (1782), 1 Bro. A release was tendered, which A. refused to execute. It was not proved that the legatee knew the contents of the deed, or that any explanation was offered to him; & it appeared to have contained an inaccurate recital:—Held: there was no forfeiture.—WILLIAMS v. KNIPE (1842), 5 Beav. 273; 49 E. Part of the real estate subject to this settlement had been sold at the time of testator's death, & was then represented by certain funds & securities that were held in trust for re-investment in land. a. Condition as to steadiness & respectability—Effect of enlistment in army.]—A bequest was made to the son of testatrix payable on his attaining 21, provided he continued a steady boy & remained in some respectable family until that time, with a bequest over if he did not do so. Without any reason being assigned therefor, the legatee enlisted & served as a private soldier in the army of the United States.

2906. In case executors unable to complete purchase—Purchase not completed—Executors able to complete.]—Testatrix, having the moiety of an estate, directed her exors. to purchase the other moiety; & "if the purchase should be completed within twelve months after her death," she gave the entirety on certain trusts; "but in case her exors. should not be able," within that time, "to purchase it," she directed her moiety to be sold, & the produce, together with £1,100 to be held on other trusts. The will contained a gift of the residue of her estate of whatever kind, etc. The purchase "was not completed" within the time, although the exors. "were able," so that neither of the expressed events happened:—Held: the trusts both of the estate & £1,100 failed; &, as between the devisees & heir at law, the latter was entitled to testatrix's moiety of the estate.—UPJOHN v. UPJOHN (1843), 7 Beav. 59; 49 E. 2907. To convey estate on request—Request condition precedent.]—Testator, G., seized in fee of an estate in L., & whose eldest son & heir-at-law, J., was seized in fee of an independent estate in T., devised as follows: "That provided his said eldest son, J., should, when requested by his second son, D., effectually convey & assure unto him, the said D. D., his heirs & assigns for ever, free from all manner of incumbrances, the estate in T., then he gave & devised his estate in L. unto him, the said J., his heirs & assigns for ever; but if the said J. should, when required as aforesaid, refuse to execute such a conveyance unto the said D. & his heirs, then he gave & devised the said estate in L. unto his said son D., his heirs & assigns for ever." Afterwards G. died, & his eldest son & heir, J., took possession of the estate in L., demised the estate in T. receiving the rents, & so retained both till his death, when he devised both to deft., his wife. During the life of J., his brother D., the lessor of pltf., never either claimed the estate in L., nor requested J. to convey to him the estate in T. according to the directions, of their father's will, but after the death of J. he did tender a conveyance of the estate in T. to deft., the devisee of J., which she refused to execute:—Held: (1) on the death of testator, his estate in L. vested in his eldest son, J., as heir-at-law; for, by a true construction of the devise, that estate in L. was only to be divested out of J., so as to vest in D., upon the condition that J. should, when requested, refuse to convey to D. his estate in T., free from all incumbrances; (2) the estate in L. did never vest in D., for that the condition never happened on which it should vest, since J. was never asked, & therefore never refused, during his life, to convey his estate in T. according to the directions of the will, & a subsequent refusal by his devisee was not equivalent to a refusal by him; (3) J. did not by demising it from year to year, disable himself from conveying the estate in T. according to the directions of the will; for that a demise from year to year was not such an incumbrance as was intended to be prohibited by the will.—DOE d. DAVIES v. DAVIES (1851), 16 Q. B. 951; 20 L. J. Q. B. 408; 17 L. T. O. S. 104; 15 Jur. 1029; 117 E. R. 1146.

2908. To return to England—Embarkation on board ship—Ship lost on voyage.]—Testator, by a codicil, after reciting that a person to whom he had by his will given a legacy of £2,000 had emigrated to Australia, proceeded therefore to revoke such legacy, & in lieu thereof gave to the same legatee, in case he remained in Australia or out of this kingdom, £600 after the death of testator's wife, "but if he return to England before her decease," testator gave him the further sum of £400:—Held: the return of the legatee to England was a condition precedent, & was not satisfied by his embarkation on board a British ship to return to England, the ship & passengers being lost on the voyage.

If the codicil had contained a recital, that, owing to the testator's displeasure with James Priestley on account of his departure to Australia, he attached this condition to the legacy as a penalty, possibly the inchoate return might have satisfied the condition (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—PRIESTLEY v. HOLGATE (1857), 3 K. & J. 286; 26 L. b. Gift to be divested on devisee "embracing doctrines of Church of Rome"—What amounts to breach.]—Testator devised an undivided third share in a lot of land to M. with a proviso that "in the event of the said M. embracing the doctrines of the church of Rome, & at any time after his majority acknowledging himself in connection with that church," the interest devised to him should pass, etc.:—Held: the condition was a double one & to defeat the gift it must be shown, not only that M. embraced the doctrines of the church of Rome, but that, after attaining his majority, 2909. Provided A. "be left an orphan"—Father living.]—Testatrix devised by her will the rents & profits of certain houses to be applied "for & towards the maintenance, education & support of my granddaughter A. until she arrives at the age of twenty-one years, provided she be left an orphan unprovided for, & lives with part of my family." On bill filed by the granddaughter, an infant, by her father as next friend, the mother being dead at the time of the execution of testatrix's will:—Held: she was not an orphan within the meaning of testatrix's will, & the rents & profits not applicable to her support, etc.—GUILMETTE v. MOSSOP (1862), 7 L. T. 190.

2910. "In the event of the death of or her separation from her present husband"—Separation by reason of infirmity.]—A bequest of an annuity to a married woman "in the event of the death of or her separation from her present husband" was followed by a right to reside in testator's house "in the event of the death of her husband or her separation from or living apart from him." She was separated from him not by any legal separation but by reason of his infirmity:—Held: she was entitled to the annuity.—BEDBOROUGH v. BEDBOROUGH (No. 2) (1865), 34 Beav. 286; 55 E. R. 645.

2911. Condition that benefice not to be held in plurality—Union of benefices.]—A clergyman who had for many years down to shortly before his death been rector of K., by his will bequeathed £1,000 "as an augmentation fund" for that benefice "upon condition that the benefice or rectory never be held in plurality by any neighbouring clergyman." Steps towards the union of the rectory of K. with a neighbouring rectory & vicarage were commenced by the bishop of the diocese in the year preceding testator's death & subsequently, in the year of his decease, the rectory of M. with the vicarage of S. & the rectory of K. were united into one benefice for ecclesiastical purposes, deft., incumbent of M.-cum-S., being presented to the rectory of K.:—Held: testator having used "plurality," which was a technical expression involving the holding of a benefice by some clergyman who at the same time holds one or more other benefices, the rector of the one united parish or benefice was not holding in plurality, & the event contemplated by the condition of defeasance had not arisen.—Re MACNAMARA, HEWITT v. JEANS (1911), 104 L. 2912. To remain in company's employment for stated period—Military service during such period.]—Testator gave a legacy of shares in a co. to each of his three sons who should, prior to attaining twenty, enter the employ of a named co. & remain in such employ until the age of thirty-three. One of the sons, who was born in 1895, in 1913, before attaining the age of twenty, entered the co.'s employ, but in Sept. 1914, he voluntarily, but with the consent of the co.'s directors, joined His Majesty's Forces, from which he had not obtained his discharge:—Held: the son had not ceased to be in the employ of the co., although from the time when he entered the army he had not actually served the company.—Re COLE, COLE v. COLE, [1919] 1 Ch. 218; 88 L. 2913. To lose estate if "actually entitled to possession or receipt" of rents of other estate.]—In 1900 G. was life tenant of a family estate. His son R. was second life tenant of the greater part, & remainderman in fee of the rest. G. & R. had a joint power of appointment over the whole estate. R. was also life tenant of the H. estate, but under a shifting clause in the will devising it, he would lose it if he became actually entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents of the family estate or the bulk of it. In order to defeat this shifting clause & enable R. virtually to have the full benefit of both estates a conveyancing device was resorted to, whereby the family estate was appointed so that at G.'s death in 1919 the interests were as follows: (a) R. was given a life rentcharge of £3,700 charged on the family estate but abateable in any year if it exceeded nine-tenths of the net rents now about £2,000. (b) Subject thereto the estate was limited to the trustees during R.'s life with possession & full powers of management. (c) The surplus income after paying the rentcharge & expenses was applicable for R.'s wife & children at the trustees' discretion. (d) The trustees were given the full powers of a life tenant under the Settled Land Acts. (e) R. was entitled to a lease of the mansion house, park & sporting rights at a nominal rent. (f) R. was given full powers of jointuring, portioning & appointing new trustees. (g) R. was given a power to revoke & appoint new uses:—Held: the above device was effectual, & R. though financially & otherwise in as good a position as if he were life tenant in possession of the family estate was not either at law or in equity entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents of the bulk of that estate, & consequently the shifting clause did not operate.—Re HINCKES, DASHWOOD v. HINCKES, [1921] 1 Ch. 475; 90 L. Testator then gave legacies of £5,000 to B. & W. respectively, & directed that, in case of a separation between W. & S., the devises & bequests to W. should go over, & be held to the sole use of S., his wife. & he bequeathed to L. £10,000; £5,000 thereof to be paid to her on her marriage, with such consent & approbation as aforesaid, & £5,000 within two years next afterwards. 2932. —— ——.]—Testator, who died in 1899, gave his daughter a pecuniary legacy upon the express condition that she should within a year of his death settle upon certain trusts of the will a sum to which she was entitled under a deed of settlement. There was no gift over in case of failure to perform the condition, or direction that in that case the legacy should fall into residue, although the residuary estate was given in trust for the daughter & three other persons. In 1905 an insufficient settlement was executed in intended performance of the condition, but the income had been paid as it would have been if there had been a settlement. The corpus was intact, & the daughter was willing to execute a proper settlement:—Held: assuming the condition was a condition precedent, the limit of time was not of the essence or substance of the condition, which would be sufficiently complied with by the daughter's execution of a proper settlement within the year.—Re PACKARD, PACKARD v. WATERS, [1920] 1 Ch. 596; 89 L. 2933. ——.]—Testator, who died on Nov. 1, 1906, bequeathed an annuity of £500 to his wife to commence from the day of his death, the first payment to be made at the expiration of three calendar months from his decease, & he declared that the annuity was intended to be in lieu of & in substitution for the annuity of £70, which he had covenanted by deed to pay to his wife, & that the bequest thereof should become & be absolutely void & of no effect unless his wife should within six calendar months after his death absolutely release & discharge his estate, effects & trustees from payment of the £70 annuity as from the date of his death. There was a gift of residue in the will but no gift over of the annuity on failure to comply with the condition. Owing to heavy incumbrances it remained doubtful during the life of the widow whether the estate would produce anything for the beneficiaries, & she died on Feb. 10, 1921, without having done anything specifically during her life to comply with the condition. The trustees being now in a position to make payments to beneficiaries raised the question whether the annuity had not been forfeited by non-compliance with the condition :—Held : the condition was not personal to the annuitant so as to be performed only by her, & a present release by her exors., which would put all parties in the position intended by testator, would be a sufficient compliance with the condition.

It is well settled by authority that where a gift in a will is made subject to a condition, even a condition precedent, to be performed within a specified time, but the condition is not in fact performed within that time, then, at any rate in the absence of an express gift over, it is always a question for the ct. to determine whether the time so specified was of the essence of the matter. In determining that question the ct. must have regard to what was presumably the intention of testator in inserting the condition, what it was that he desired to bring about or to guard against ; & if the ct. finds that a performance of the condition at a time subsequent to the expiration of the time fixed by testator in substance provides for the very thing that testator intended to provide for, so that all parties can be put in substantially the same position as they would have been in had the condition been performed within the proper time, time is not regarded as of the essence, & such performance is treated as a sufficient compliance of the condition (ROMER, J.).—Re GOODWIN, AINSLIE v. GOODWIN, [1924] 2 Ch. 26 ; 93 L. 2934. ——— How calculated.] — Bequest of residue, in trust, in case A. shall within six months after testator's decease give security not to marry B. then, & not otherwise, to pay to the children of A. ; with a proviso to go over, if she shall refuse or neglect to give such security. A condition precedent. The six months are exclusive of the day of testator's death : therefore ; as he died on Jan. 12, between eight & nine in the evening, a security given on July 12, about nine in the evening, was held sufficient. No general rule, in computing time from an act or an event, that the day is to be inclusive or exclusive ; depending on the reason of the thing, according to the circumstances.—LESTER v. GARLAND (1808), 15 Ves. 248 ; 33 E. Pltf. pleaded in bar a devise to one I. of the lands in which, etc., for sixty years, who demised them to pltf. for one year. Deft. replied, a feoffment in fee after the making the will, to the use, amongst other uses, of I. for sixty years after the death of the devisor, with a proviso, if I. should disturb T. & others, etc., so that they could not quietly enjoy the tenements the devisor conveyed to them, etc., or if I. should not permit the exors. of the devisor to have & remove, etc., all the goods & chattels, etc., of him the devisor, which should then be in his mansion house, or if he should do any thing to impede & frustrate the intention of the devisor expressed in his will, the use should cease & be void; & further pleaded, that I. entered into a house where certain goods of the devisor were, & took them; & that the exors. came & requested I. to let them take away the goods, but that I. would not permit the exors. to take them away: but he altogether prevented & hindered them from so doing; & then deft. concluded his replication by averring that the use to I. ceased.
